THE PUBLISHER'S FOREWORD

This 27th edition, in the 28th year since this Handbook was started, comes out in the midst of its second war. Uncertainties and difficulties have delayed, but not as much as anticipated, the appearance of this edition. Depleted staff and doubling up, not only on the editorial side, but in the printing offices and binderies, have made adherence to a schedule difficult. What the coming years will produce is in the laps of the gods, particularly the political ones.

THIS HANDBOOK SERIES

The first edition, begun in 1914, was published in 1915. In the five ensuing years of war and its aftermath only four thinned editions could be produced. This was to have been one of several series of handbooks. Of the educational handbooks, the Handbook of Summer Camps went through twelve editions from 1924 to 1935. The Handbook for Private School Teachers, a compendium to make them acquainted with each other and with their functions, failed to arouse the interest of the profession, so only one edition was published, in 1930. "Private Initiative", an encyclopedic index of literature on private schools, covering the period from 1914 to 1934 and published in the latter year, might have been continued if enough had cared for it. Of the other series only the Handbook of New England has been produced and that in only three editions, though manuscript had been prepared for others.

ANNUAL SURVEYS

Out of the introductions to the Handbook of Private Schools have come a number of separately published books. "Human Affairs 1938" was started in the hope that it might be an annual survey of the growing comprehension of the human intellect of the universe. "Education 1939: A Realistic View" was an attempt to present education at the stage of advance or confusion at which it had arrived at that time. "What Makes Lives", 1940, was a rather more comprehensive survey of the factors, influences, and forces that make our culture what it is, our personalities as they are,—that supply our mental content, which influences our emotions and acts, and determine the course of history.

The outbreak of war interfered with the continuance of these annual surveys, so that in 1942 we were obliged to present the changed situation, "Education in Wartime". All these small volumes, running 128 to 224 pages, published at from $1.00 to $1.50, met with a demand that has practically exhausted the editions except for occasional rare copies.

FIFTY MILLION WORDS

In a little over quarter of a century we have produced forty-four volumes of these Handbooks, averaging about a thousand pages each, sixteen editions of School, Summer Camp, and College Guides varying from 128 to 230 pages, twenty-four editions of Guides for School and Camp Buyers,—making a total of more than fifty thousand pages printed in this uniform page format.

In addition Private School News, now in its seventeenth year, was at one time a thirty-two page monthly. Moreover, some score or more of magazine articles on educational subjects have been published, the whole making a total of well over fifty million words that have been printed to aid parents, and the schools and camps that serve them.

Incidental services have grown up in response to the demands of both parents and schools. For some years a staff of over fifty writers and designers and the like produced an output of thousands of catalogs, booklets, and brochures published for schools, tens of thousands of school advertisements designed, written, and placed. The influence of this work still shows in improved conciseness and concreteness in school publicity literature and advertising.

All this has not been without some effect. In 1914 the private schools were hardly known to each other except for the little group that belonged to what was then a snobbishly conducted Headmasters' Association, since broadened and liberalized. In the last year or so the private schools have begun to cooperate and step out a bit for themselves, and through the Secondary Education Board produce a commendable periodical, the Independent School Bulletin.

All this effort has diverted me from my real job. I have published only one volume of poetry, and I have a drawer full ready to be published,—only one volume of sermons, though I utter them every day. Current international complications have resulted in the publication of two volumes, totaling over a thousand pages, on education and the war. Any number of books in part written, that do not fall into this educational pattern, I still hope to produce.

THE EDITOR'S PREFACE

It is the function of the editor in the preface to advertise his book in the guise of an apology and perhaps to explain how it was put together and why it is so inadequate. That affords a large opportunity.

FINDING THE SCHOOL

The original plan, always adhered to, is to produce a book that will guide parents through the mazes of the private schools and their offerings, to help them find the school best fitted to the needs of their boy or girl. The intent is to give something of the history, personnel, and atmosphere of the individual schools. This realistic, discriminating depiction of the schools and those who control them has been appreciated by parents and by most schoolmasters, though some of the latter would prefer to have their own, perhaps less colorful but more or less factual though somewhat idealistic, statement accepted and published.

The arrangement of the schools is geographically by states and alphabetically by towns, a compromise arrangement which makes it possible to turn to a school and that at the same time brings schools that may interest a particular family relatively near together. The Table of Contents makes clear this arrangement, while the alphabetical index makes it possible to look up any school the name of which is known.

PROGRESS REPORT

The introductory section of the book this year must largely deal with the absorbing but it is hoped temporary activities connected with the war effort. In most of the schools much of this is imitative, and to insert it in the description in the text would result in much repetition. So a generalized view of the various types of activity is given in the introduction. Moreover, the program of any particular school as to acceleration or summer courses or the reorganization of its curriculum is at present largely tentative. The most desirable way of learning specifically about current activities is to write to the school at the time information is needed. Our reporting and interpretation of these war activities reflects a lack of continuity and consistency incident to the sudden changes and rapid readjustment of the schools to current needs.

Some permanent changes, however, will result, and to that end we have tried to give a broader and more searching view of certain neglected phases. Subjects of the curriculum once considered permanent in their conventional treatment,—such supposedly elementary subjects as geography, history, civics and government,—are in the light of recent events taking on a completely new complexion. Some of the underlying trends in this direction we have endeavored to point out. With the world turning so rapidly, the people's activities so speeded up, it becomes difficult this year to decide at just what point to halt our report of progress. Events and utterances as late as the last week of May will be found to have been incorporated.

WARTIME CHANGES

In this year of confusion and uncertainty, the statistical presentation of the schools in the usual way is of lesser value than formerly. Academic requirements have been thrown to the winds, age limits lowered, preparatory years shortened, and college admission is on a wholly new basis and subject to further change without notice. The armed forces, government agencies, and the lure of high wages in essential industries have drawn particularly heavily on the male members of the faculties.

The government has taken over either by lease or purchase many of the boarding schools. In some cases where there are foundation funds these schools suspended for the duration will probably be revived. In boys' schools, as with the colleges, the government has in some cases leased dormitories or contracted with the schools to take enlisted cadets.

So in this 27th edition a greater number of schools have been omitted because of discontinuance than ever before. A list of the more important schools that have been reported discontinued will be found following the critical descriptions of the schools, pp. 593-4. The Index of Schools also carries some notations on well-known schools which are discontinued or temporarily suspended. These lists and memoranda are in all probability far from complete as some school principals are reluctant to announce the demise of their schools and others have failed to notify us of their intent to close at the end of the academic year.

The war has brought many changes in the heads of schools. Information that reached us prior to May 20 is included in the body of the book. Where details of change in head, discontinuance or merger of the schools have reached us since that date, up to June 2, the change has been noted wherever possible in the Index of Schools, the last section of the book to be printed.

MEETING PARENTS' NEEDS

Today parents are more discriminating than in the old days when they sent their children to school in complete faith that the school was what it ought to be and that the child and family must conform to the ideals and standards of the school. The idea is penetrating that there is no 'best' school except as it affects the particular boy or girl. The best may be the worst. Moreover, the number of parents who have freedom of choice and brains to discriminate is increasing.

Parents and even school people are coming to recognize that boys and girls failing, disgruntled, uninspired, may, transplanted, develop very differently in a more favorable environment. Perhaps more sunlight is needed, perhaps less; sometimes a more acid soil may be indicated.

THE RIGHT SCHOOL

While education may not have caught up with the times, while the general practice may be ritualistic, traditional, or conventional, there are individual school masters and school mistresses who are interested in boys and girls as human beings and, quite aside from their theories, can adapt the course of study and the environment to meet human needs. That's the great advantage of the private schools, their flexibility, adaptability, and individuality. So there are schools that will come near to meeting the needs of every type of boy or girl. But that depends upon the men and women in charge and their freedom from automatic and autocratic control.

Thousands of parents each year make their selection of schools or are influenced in the selection by the Handbook. A North Carolina physician writes, "Your Handbook of Private Schools should be the first book in every public library. It has been of such immeasurable help to me recently that I am going to see that the latest edition is kept in the one in this town." Another father writes, "Do you recall that about three years ago you had a talk with my son, since in attendance at. . . . From your Handbook we also selected the secondary school for our daughter's education, and she has just graduated from college. . . . It must be gratifying to play the part you are playing in influencing to the everlasting good of boys and girls, their selection of the environment for their most important educational years."

It is even more gratifying to have the same families come over a period of a dozen years or more as successive children are ready for a change of school environment away from home.

Many old pupils of my teaching days have brought their sons or daughters to me to know what to do with them. Still more satisfying are the letters I continue to receive from boys and girls through and after their college careers, who in former years came to me with their parents for advice as to their education.

TWENTY THOUSAND FAMILIES

For many years now more than a thousand families a year have come for educational help or advice. Probably not less than twenty thousand families in the last quarter of a century have received some assistance in deciding on school, camp or college through this office. They see the Handbook in libraries or in information bureaus. They are recommended to us by librarians or school and college officials, or by their camp directors, and especially by parents whom we have helped in the past.

Current confused conditions in the schools and in family life have increased the number of families seeking help. Readjustments in the parents' lives often imply changes in the children's school course. Fathers in the service, mothers engaged in war work find it necessary to relocate their children. Parents whose children have always been in schools close to the eastern seaboard ask about schools farther inland, away from the big industrial centers.

WHO PAYS

To handle this great number of inquiries it has been necessary to maintain staff to serve them. No commission or fee has ever been accepted from the school, college, or camp. In these times of imposed economies and shrinking income we have little expectation of continuing on the same scale the free information services that we have maintained for so many years.

To continue to render essential services both to schools and parents it becomes necessary to restrict telephone service and to require that the problem first be specifically and succinctly stated in writing and sent in by mail. Acknowledgment will be made promptly and forms sent to be filled in, which will make it possible to handle the inquiry and supply the necessary information with efficiency and economy.

For such services, as in the past, no charge will be made except for extended research or correspondence, for which a suitable fee may be charged as is explained on the forms which the inquirer fills out.

Personal consultations can be arranged in advance by mail. An appropriate fee will be charged where parents are able to pay.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS IN WAR WORK

The problems of the private schools have been greatly multiplied by the present emergency and the war effort imposed upon them. The boys schools particularly are faced with the loss of teachers to the armed forces or other government work, mounting cost of living, reduction of income from investments, difficulty in securing materials, food, and labor. With all this, the calling of youths of eighteen into service is cutting enrollment and income, while at the same time tremendous pressure is exerted to accelerate the education of boys so that they may finish secondary school and, where possible, complete the first year of college before induction.

CHANGES ARE RAPID

Great numbers of boarding schools have turned over to their pupils such tasks as waiting on table, making beds, and cleaning rooms. In addition many schools which have farms or gardens, such as High Mowing, Westtown, Putney, Grier, Darrow, Avon, have produced considerable quantities of foodstuffs. Others, like Proctor Academy, Cambridge School, St. Mark's, Peddie, Hotchkiss, Vermont Academy, Dublin, have afforded great aid to farmers through labor supplied by pupils.

Reports from the individual schools are fragmentary and somewhat contradictory, reflecting the confusion that exists. However, from various announcements, publications, and hundreds of letters that individual schools have written us in regard to their war activities and adjustments to keep up with the times, it is possible to develop something of a pattern. But the only way to know about a particular school at any time is to write or get on the ground.

"War programs are constantly changing these days. Therefore, in supplying representative excerpts from several war programs submitted to us, we ask you to remember that (1), the program may be radically altered by the time the excerpt is published; (2), an excerpt is simply a taste, not a meal. If your appetite remains unappeased, write the school for the complete program; (3), most of the excerpts deal with the problem of acceleration." (Independent School Bulletin, Feb., 1943, p. 15)

CONFUSION OF AIMS

"The capitulation of educational authorities to the directives of the war aims of the government, is a sobering indication of lack of conviction on the part of these leaders as to what it is they want, what it is they believe the nation needs educationally, and how they believe it can be obtained," writes Ordway Tead in the Saturday Review, March 6, 1943. "The heart of the problem is that our sense of the aims of education is so confused, that we so completely lack clarity and agreement about them, that we are always in danger of spending our money for that which is not bread. . . . Our faith in education, I repeat, is sublime. But it will be a faith warranted by performance and results only if we keep the educators loyal to their faith and the fighters loyal to their function."

At Lawrenceville, Head Master Allan V. Heely as early as the season of 1941-42 maintained a series of defense lectures for his students, covering such subjects as war geography and the Far East. In a later series, Heely invited nine such diverse leaders of thought as Herbert Agar, Pearl S. Buck, Reinhold Niebuhr, and others to hold forth, each on his favorite theme. A more assorted group could hardly be brought together, presenting the greatest variety of views by no means in harmony. But many of the messages to the boys were very valuable. Outstanding were the addresses of John Erskine and Earnest Hooton. All these have been published in a volume with an introduction by Heely and a preface by Thomas H. Johnson, under the title "Men of Tomorrow" (Putnam, 1942).

THE PROBLEM OF SURVIVAL

"Private Schools Facing Issue of Survival in War" is the title of an article by Head Master James I. Wendell of the Hill School in the New York Herald Tribune, Feb. 7, 1943. Schoolmasters face "difficult years" with "high living costs, an ever-increasing turnover in labor, food rationing, the increasing demands of the war effort, restlessness among the older boys with respect to their immediate futures. . . . Schoolmasters know that their schools cannot continue to remain unaffected by the social and economic revolution through which the country is passing."

Immediate threats are "the shifting sands of tuition income", the drying up of alumni gifts, with the increase in operating expenses. "A school with a theoretical $1400 to $1500 tuition fee may have taken in an average actually of $1100 a boy" and found that he cost on an average $1200. The "tuition system based on individual ability to pay", first formally adopted by Father Sill at Kent, has now been adopted by Hill and many other schools.

MORTALITY RATE

The mortality rate among the private schools is rising as they face these pressing problems of enrollment and income. Weekly we hear of more schools or colleges taken over by the government, or which for other reasons have suspended for the duration or closed their doors permanently. (Cf. pp. 593-4)

"It seems clear that before the war is over, some schools will have disappeared entirely, while others will have been taken over by the government; and it is questionable if many of these casualties will be restored to their former status after the war", Frederick S. Allis, Jr., formerly editor of the Phillips (Andover) Bulletin, now in the Navy, writes in the Independent School Bulletin, Dec., 1942.

"War is the supreme test of the adaptability of institutions, whether governmental, industrial, religious, or educational", writes Head Master Claude M. Fuess of Andover, in the Atlantic Monthly, May, 1942. "Those which are unbending, spongy with dry rot, or deficient in vitality crash before the continued storm. Those which are deep-rooted and flexible adjust themselves to new conditions and survive. The American private secondary schools . . . are now facing the challenge of a rapidly changing world, and are feeling acutely their responsibility to their pupils and to their country."

GOVERNMENT STEPS IN

The government has as yet, naturally enough, manifested relatively less interest in the secondary schools than it has in the colleges, as the material is not yet ripe for their purposes. From the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Air, Department of the Navy, came early in the year a statement of what the military service demanded in the last two or three years of secondary school training, reasonable requirements for the most part.

First they emphasized the desirability of "concentration on mathematics and sciences", particularly physics. Among the many new requirements, prominent are pre-flight aeronautics with some instruction in "navigation, aerology, aerodynamics, and meteorology" which "would form a basis for better digestion of the intensive work given by the services after induction"; English, "including the ability to write . . . and . . . spell"; "physical fitness . . . to toughen the body and increase the stamina". (Independent School Bulletin, Feb., 1943)

Further announcements from government agencies made it clear that it was not merely more intensive drill of the same kind that was needed in mathematics so much as increased accuracy, greater skill, and a broader view. To meet these requirements it has been necessary for teachers to assume new duties and attempt to teach subjects new to them,—mathematics, physics, or the special subjects required.

Major Francis Parkman, U.S.A. Air Force, formerly head master of St. Mark's, speaking at a meeting on pre-induction training held at the University of Pennsylvania, Nov. 13, 1942, emphasized the need for instruction in physics and mathematics. In selecting students for pre-flight courses he recommended the Aeronautics Aptitude Test available from the Office of Education. "Emphasis must be placed not on passing but on mastery of the subject", he pointed out. (Independent School Bulletin, Nov., 1942)

CONFLICTING DEMANDS

Some confusion is created by the wide variance in measures proposed by officialdom. "Every school should be a military camp", was the view expressed last November by Maury Maverick, War Production Board representative, who further suggested that we dispense with "all education that doesn't contribute physically and spiritually to the winning the war". (AP, Nov. 30, 1942)

On the other hand the Navy Department's V-1 accredited college program has been explained by Dean Karl G. Miller of the University of Pennsylvania, writing as secretary of the Middle States Association, and quoted in the bulletin sent to patrons by Stony Brook School,—"Specifically the Navy asks secondary schools to see that their students study algebra, plane geometry, physics, American history, and English. Preparation in a foreign language is recommended. . . . The Navy emphasizes that this program is not a request that schools and colleges abandon their general academic work to put in technical and scientific programs, or that they add highly specialized courses to fit pupils for particular duties. Schools cannot help the Navy as much by doing either of these things as they can by continuing to do honest, high standard work that will prepare their students for the specialized training the Navy will give."

Similar is the Army viewpoint as expressed by a report of the Division of Secondary Education of the University of the State of New York, which conducted a comprehensive investigation of basic educational requirements of the various branches of military service. As to the value of special courses at the secondary school level, it was stated that "such courses would be of little value to boys who are entering the armed forces. It is their belief, however, that it is possible to include in the present mathematics and science courses materials that would be of great help."

WARTIME COURSES

College preparatory schools generally are endeavoring to keep in tune with the war effort and at the same time to carry on their usual courses. Some of them are offering in addition agricultural or technical courses or intensified work in mathematics. In some schools languages have been made available for war purposes, such as Russian at Detroit University School, Italian at St. Paul's, Japanese at Holderness.

So-called Commando courses for toughening have been introduced at Middlesex and Valley Forge. At St. Paul's there is rifle practice for upper class boys. Lawrenceville provides a course in field artillery.

Some of the schools have published elaborate booklets outlining their wartime programs. The most extensive of these is that of Andover, an impressive pamphlet explaining "The War Program for Andover Seniors" and announcing the second summer session "to help boys of secondary school age to prepare themselves more rapidly and more thoroughly for national service, both in this war emergency and afterwards".

Andover, which has long maintained a broad public relations policy, offering courses for the townspeople with its equipment and staff, making its playing fields and athletic equipment available to the public, "in the belief that a plant as large as Andover's should not lie fallow during a fourth of the year" (Allis, Independent School Bulletin, Dec., 1942), is doing much in connection with the war, as Head Master Fuess explained in his Atlantic article.

"The Hill School in War Time" explains the unusual opportunities Hill with the facilities of its Hobby House offers in navigation, economic geography, seamanship, aeronautics, aircraft engine laboratory work, mechanical drawing, meteorology, mechanics, electronics and radio, and Junior Commando training.

INFORMING PATRONS

Many other schools have issued mimeographed bulletins or circular letters to their patrons and friends outlining their unusual courses or plans for the emergency. C. Lambert Heyniger of the Darrow School in a 14-page letter announces a plan "For the Emergency and After", permitting graduation three times a year.

Head Master Pulling of Millbrook makes his letters interestingly personal. February 19, 1943, he wrote, "Since many of the older boys now in school will probably enter the armed forces immediately after graduation, thereby having to forego or at least defer a liberal arts education in college, it seems to us more important today than ever before to give them a broad and thorough education in school. To a considerable extent the academic job of the college has temporarily devolved upon the school. For this reason Millbrook, together with a great majority of other private secondary schools, is not abandoning or curtailing its usual courses of study but rather is trying to intensify them and make them more significant."

AERONAUTICS TRAINING

A score of boys' schools became affiliated in 1942 with the Air Training Corps of America and organized a two year course in Aeronautics for their Juniors and Seniors. These courses include study of the structure and design of the airplane, engines, aerodynamics, meteorology, communications and air navigation and satisfy the ground school requirements for military aviation. Hackley and Lake Grove are among these affiliates. Mercersburg, Williston, Vermont Academy, Riverside, Choate, Kiskiminetas, among others, offer ground school work. Williston has as well a Civilian Pilot Training program.

To most of the schools the work is new since 1942 but Scarborough is offering for the eighth year a course in aeronautics under an ex-Air Force major who has engines and airships to work with in the school shop. Riverside Military Academy has offered ground school work for several years. Some schools have head masters that have been enthusiastic civilian fliers like Proctor Academy and Landon School. Actual flying is available for some schools near Civilian Training airports, out of the restricted coastal areas, like Berkshire.

Civilian Pilot Training candidates have been assigned to Berkshire, who have limited relations with the school body. At Mercersburg the first Marine setup began in November, 1942, with twenty candidates to take a 16 weeks course. "The ground-school work will consist of physics, mathematics, meteorology and navigation, radio code, military and physical training, military science and discipline, aircraft identification, civil air regulations, and general servicing and operation of aircraft." (Independent School Bulletin, Feb., 1943)

ACCELERATION THROUGH SUMMER WORK

At Phillips Exeter the speed-up program is described as not "accelerated" but an "anticipatory program", the Phillips Exeter Bulletin remarking last spring, "You cannot do a four-minute egg in two minutes!" Exeter has long maintained a summer school for make-up and acceleration in college preparatory subjects.

Andover announces its second summer session with an illustrated booklet going into detail. The work is planned particularly for boys who will be inducted within a year, but younger boys who want to make special progress are accepted. The summer session is under the direction of Alan R. Blackmer, who writes, Feb. 26, 1943, "The chief aim of the Session is that of last year; namely, to use the Academy's resources to the fullest possible extent in preparing boys for service to the country in this emergency. It will continue to offer courses in most of the basic subjects of the Andover curriculum, with emphasis on those of most apparent advantage as pre-military training. And, in addition to regular sports, it will give boys a daily workout on special body conditioning exercises."

Taft in instituting its summer session stated that the school was "inclined to agree with the oft-used phrase that 'you cannot accelerate adolescence'" and recognized "disadvantages in an educational 'speed-up'".

Lawrenceville, Berkshire, Portsmouth Priory, St. James, and many other schools are providing summer courses so that the boy may take four terms a year and complete his course in shortened time. Some schools that have always supplied individual courses allowing students to push ahead at will, like Wassookeag, Clark, Cheshire, Milford, Oxford Academy, are giving particular emphasis to their long experience in "accelerating".

At the Edgewood School, Miss Langley writes, "We especially planned the tutoring school for the group of boys who would be eighteen in January, February, or March, and would be drafted before getting their diplomas in June. This procedure disqualifies these young men because without a high school diploma they are not eligible for Officers' Training or the Marines. I feel very strongly that the public schools should extend their program throughout the summer, giving advanced courses so that the students would have their diplomas when they are eighteen, for they will never return to play with a few points in high school subjects after the more realistic experiences in the army or navy, as the case may be. I have talked to the Commissioner of Education of the State, and to the Superintendent of Schools in Greenwich, and they are very sympathetic with this idea, especially since we have a capable staff who can handle those subjects not only which the high school asks, but also what the army and navy want."

California schools have seldom had summer sessions, but this year Thacher, Webb, Cate-Vosburg and Midlands are announcing a joint summer session.

Other schools are emphasizing summer work devoted to farming projects. St. Mark's, Hotchkiss, and Cambridge School in 1942 had such groups who lived at the school and were sent out under supervision to various farms in the neighborhood which needed their help. They were given regular farm hands pay. Still others with farm land of their own or easily accessible carry on their own program. Kiskiminetas has a farm project by which the plowing and planting is done by the regular school boys, tending and harvesting by the summer school boys who may enroll for as little as two weeks. Late harvesting is again done by the winter boys. The McDonogh School near Balti-

GIRLS SCHOOLS

Girls schools, especially those for older girls, are experiencing some reduction in enrollment. Some finishing schools and junior colleges are discontinued. Most of the girls schools that formerly concentrated on college preparation are adding war features. The Baldwin School has a Victory Corps. The Brearley has made minor changes. Chatham Hall has not changed its "objectives" but is changing "emphases". Emma Willard School continues to emphasize the college preparatory course. Dobbs is emphasizing "a social studies program", and Low-Heywood "science classes". And so it goes, as reported in the Independent School Bulletin, May, 1943.

The urge to do, not to study, extends well down to the teenage girls. The chance to do practical work, full of value to community and country, has great allure. And among younger girls the prospect of working hard to prepare for four years of remote college work seems fantastic.

Some of the schools for girls have introduced outright military training. At Ogontz military drill has been a part of the curriculum for years. Foxcroft School was last year reorganized as a military school for girls. The Halsted School offers fencing and jiu-jitsu.

A few girls' schools are announcing summer farm projects in connection with academic work or camp activities, like Northampton School for Girls and San Luis. But most of the girls who want real work with the soil find it in the progressive coeducational schools. Most of them are located on farms in rural districts like Putney, High Mowing, Goddard College, and Springdale.

SOME REPUDIATE ACCELERATION

A number of head masters, and parents too, feel rather strongly that the speeding up process, acceleration as it is called, is not going to prove helpful to growing boys. They are making special effort to maintain equilibrium and remain unexcited by the pressure exerted and the public clamor. This is true of most of the Friends Schools. The George School is not adopting any general program of acceleration.

George N. Northrop of Roxbury Latin School wrote in the Atlantic, June, 1942, "Any acceleration of the preparatory school course would seem to be unfortunate, but much can be done in intensification of the work in mathematics, geography, especially map reading, and in emphasis upon the actual speaking use of modern languages. This last desideratum will be more easily attained now that the bogey of the College Board examinations, with their emphasis upon the grammar and their neglect of practice in the spoken word, has been exorcised."

In his annual report Rector Stabler of Avon School states, "It is our firm belief that adolescence cannot be speeded up beyond a certain point; somehow, nature insists upon taking her time. Therefore, we regard acceleration on the secondary school level as highly undesirable unless imperatively necessary, and feel that the case of each boy should be weighed upon its own merits."

The head master of Fountain Valley School, Dr. Froelicher, writes, "We are having a summer session. I am opposed to acceleration and think it is wrong in principle and fact. I do think, however, with our world upside down, that boys should be given the opportunity of securing their school diplomas before they are in uniform. My summer session is solely for that purpose."

SCHOOLS GEOGRAPHICALLY

New England schools have been particularly receptive to the idea of using their students for farm work. Boys' schools are naturally in the preponderance but some of the girls' schools and most of the coeducational have given hearty cooperation.

The Atlantic seaboard from New York to Florida, a region in which considerable number of military schools have survived the anti-military feeling of the last two decades, have naturally emphasized military and naval training. Enthusiasm about this has grown with the war.

There are only a few cases in the welter of the military throughout the deep South and the Middle West. In the South West the proportion of Schools discontinued is larger than in any other section. Many of them were "luxury" schools. Practically all had problems of transportation from trading centers of from 10 to 50 miles. Many, established only in the last 10 or 15 years, had not a strong enough root growth to stand the strain.

Pacific coast saw a series of amalgamations of individual schools and of groups of schools, discarded many of the showier activities like annual gymkanas.

CULTURAL BLACKOUT FEARED

Private schools as well as colleges are cognizant of the significance of Horace's "Inter arma silent musae". Charles L. Stevens, Head Master of Wilbraham, speaking to the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, warned, "We must . . . not allow a cultural blackout in America during these trying days. . . . Those values which grow from the study of the humanities must be preserved. We must not lose sight of the basic assumption that the chief aim of our secondary schools should be the preparation for life in a peaceful, freedom loving world."

A good many schools are proceeding with caution and, in the words of one head master, "are laying increased emphasis on thorough academic work, particularly in higher mathematics and science". The majority of private school people can doubtless subscribe to the words of the head master of Storm King School, who writes, "Our adaptations to modern conditions are mainly those which common sense and necessity have demanded".

Many head masters will sympathize with the views of Rudolph D. Lindquist of Cranbrook, who writes, "While we in the schools are under this compulsion, we have also to keep in mind that these boys who are destined to help win this war have the further responsibility of helping to recreate the civilized world after the war is won. So we seek to lay as broad a foundation as we can through their study of literature, history, languages, science, and mathematics for an understanding of physical, social, and spiritual problems of their world."

THE FUTURE OF THE PRIVATE SCHOOLS

Each war brings out the weaknesses, the failures of our educational system. Following the first World War there was a great resurgence of idealism and flat determination to make good the deficiencies in education. The high hopes raised in England were not realized. (Cf 4th ed. of this Handbook, 1918, p. 71, 6th ed., 1921, p. 49; 25th ed., 1941, p. 44.)

RECURRENT OPPOSITION

This enthusiasm in America centered about hopes and praise for democracy, for which we supposedly had made the world safe. During the war forces had been centralized and nationalism accented in the guise of democracy. The opposition to private schools that arose at that time was largely based on the belief that they were undemocratic.

During the early twenties the Atlantic Monthly made a feature of publishing articles along this line. Under the title "The Dissociated Schools" they were presented as dissociated from the life of the nation and undemocratic in their tendencies. As a protective measure against this apparent snobbishness, some schools especially those with a board of trustees, not proprietary, introduced the term 'independent'. (Cf. this Handbook, 9th ed., 1924-25, pp. 10-11.)

In the states where public schools had been fostered from the first by grants of public lands, private schools had no such standing as in the older states where up to recent time they had been predominant. In those Western states the opposition took legislative form.

In Oregon, where the public schools were particularly excellent and most private schools were parochial or military, the reaction against military and church education resulted in the passage of a law which required every boy and girl up to sixteen to attend the public schools. There was similar legislation proposed in Michigan, and many states passed laws requiring private schools to be licensed and inspected as in England, where since 1918 private schools not up to inspectors' standards have been "blacklisted". (Cf this Handbook, 8th ed., 1923, p. 17; 12th ed., 1927-28, p. 29.)

SHALL PRIVATE SCHOOLS BE SUPPRESSED?

Now in the midst of another war a liberal, even radical educational publication raises the same issue again, which a few years ago would have been wholly out of order. But in these days of change we must be prepared for almost anything that may happen. Frontiers of Democracy, April 15, 1943, recalls,—

"Some twenty years ago the state of Oregon by referendum passed a law establishing the public school as the only available school for all its children between the ages of eight and sixteen. On appeal the courts overruled this action declaring the law not valid. The decision was, however, not uniformly convincing. With the new attitude on the U. S. supreme bench there is no certainty that the decision would now be against the law. . . .

"The arguments now favoring such a law are weighty. Before considering these, however, it should be admitted that in the past a few privately conducted schools have contributed appreciably to the advancement of American educational thought and practice. In comparison, though, the number of such is small. Most non-public schools live contentedly behind the best present thought. Moreover, many public schools are excellent and the proportion is growing largely. Glencoe (Ill.), for example has schools apparently equal to any private schools; Highcrest (Wilmette, Ill.) and the Maury School (Richmond, Va.) are said by some competent authorities to be better than any private schools in the country. It is true that as matters now stand in not a few places the public schools at present suffer in comparison with the private schools."

Taking up a "position", Frontiers argues, "Private (secular) schools exist primarily for segregation purposes, to shelter the privileged from the common-run. . . . Such cliques are seriously hurtful to American public life. . . . The parochial school exists primarily to segregate its school population from assimilative interaction with the rest of the people. . . . It builds a mind different from the common American mind; it creates blocs peculiarly liable to demagogic influence. . . .

"In many cities there are three school systems: public, parochial, and private. The two latter groups, while opposing each other, unite to weaken the support of the public schools. . . . The conviction grows that the existence of the private school and of the parochial school is, in the net, hurtful to the best interests of American education and American life."

THE SCHOOLS' DEFENSE

That this opposition to the private school is again growing, that it is in the air, is evident from the numerous articles by supporters of the private school, defensive or emphasizing future opportunities and obligations.

"Some Future Tasks of the Private School" are dwelt on by William Hubben of the George School in School and Society, Feb. 27, 1943. He points out that most of the problems discussed deal with economic prospects or changes in the curriculum. He would attract attention to their 'recognized assets',

'progressive methods', 'individual approach to students', and 'moral and religious emphasis'. "The emotional dislocations caused by this war . . . will challenge the private schools beyond past experiences."

Arthur E. Traxler, Associate Director of the Educational Records Bureau, in School and Society, Nov. 28, 1942, considers the non-tax-supported school "Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow". Running lightly over the history, changes, and characteristics of these "independent schools", he points to their "unique opportunity" and the desirability of their not imitating or duplicating the work of the public school.

He would have them "preserve our cultural heritage for a large proportion of our future leaders". He sees them as training places for our leaders. "This does not mean that the independent schools necessarily create leaders. Rather, many of their students are born to leadership because of the social, economic, cultural, and intellectual background from which they come." He would have the independent school "discover what qualities in leaders will be needed in the future" and "re-appraise critically and ruthlessly its present program in the light of its analysis of present and future needs of citizen leadership".

SURVIVING THE 'REVOLUTION'

Harvey S. Reed of the McDonogh School, Maryland, in "The Private School in 1945" in the same issue points out that while "the prosperity created by the war will keep [school] budgets balanced temporarily and perhaps give them a little surplus", there is a changed future ahead. Parents even with increased incomes will have a larger part of it taken away by taxes. There is demand for technically trained men, which his school is endeavoring to meet with training in husbandry, shop work, and commercial subjects. These measures, with reduced tuition, it is hoped will enable the school to survive the "social revolution".

What this revolution is and the necessary "Educational Planning for Post-War Reconstruction", excerpts from his "Now Is The Moment" (Duell, Sloan & Pearce, 1943), is dealt with by Harold Rugg in Frontiers of Democracy, April 15, 1943. In this study of "our times", by which he means from 1890 to 1970, he looks upon this as a period of "ideational revolution", the roots of which "lie in a vast shift in governing ideas and moods that has been definitely gathering momentum for a century". Rugg regards it as up to the teacher to interpret the trends and to point the way.

Rugg's book is urgent in its enthusiasm for improving this great opportunity to build the foundations of the post-war world. It is filled with "the imaginative, poetic, religious ideal-ization of the good life that could be lived". And he believes with Alvin Hansen, the Harvard-Administration economist, that "a people can afford whatever it can produce".

"SUPREME OPPORTUNITY"

"The Independent School and the Post-War World" was the topic of Richard M. Gummere, Director of Admissions, Harvard, at the Fiftieth Anniversary of the George School, March, 1943. He points out that they have begun "to take measures not only for their preservation but for their progress. Their gatherings are better attended than ever before. The National Council of Independent Schools has been given a representation of three members on the American Council on Education. . . . The Secondary Education Board is widening its scope. The Educational Records Bureau is making an extended scientific study of private school policies. The executive secretary of the Progressive Education Association is about to leave for a three months' absence, interpreting the American procedures to the British."

Mr. Gummere discovers "a supreme opportunity" for the independent school. He tells us, "Adolescents must be trained to speak, read, write, and understand English in the white light of intelligent actuality. For the repair work necessary" he refers us "to the researches of Douglas Waples, Professor of Library Science at the University of Chicago, who finds the reading tastes and thought-habits of the general public at a low ebb."

He tells us, "The independent school is facing and trying to solve the problem of 'Education for Democracy' ",—that, after generations of autocracy in the schools and the fading of the democratic dream in the world outside.

Norman B. Nash in his 1941 annual report of St. Paul's School put the need of the private school cogently. "In a time when the state, whether democratic or totalitarian, is undertaking a larger and larger share in the education of its youth . . . it is our conviction that neither the democratic nor the totalitarian state can safely be trusted with a monopoly in education, since a precious part of true education is the freedom for critical study and evaluation of society as it is. . . . In such a time the independent school or university which lacks a fundamental conviction to justify its continued existence is not likely to survive."

COOPERATIVE AND DEFENSIVE MEASURES

Formerly these private schools were so very 'independent', so individual, that any kind of cooperation had proved difficult, and their heads often so gullible that they grasped at charlatan schemes of salvation that naturally proved futile. Foreboding of what was ahead and more recently the closing and merging of private schools has led to some cooperation.

Since its inception two years ago by the Association of Country Day School Headmasters, the Committee on Public Service has endeavored to devise ways and means of closer cooperation of private and public schools,—the better use of scholarship funds, improvement of “group purchasing plans”, “the establishment and support of a National Council of Independent Schools, which shall serve as a gatherer of information for those schools on matters affecting their service to the Nation”. At the New York Conference, the Committee declared itself in favor of increased cooperation. (Independent School Bulletin, April, 1943.)

Time and Fortune, always interested in the private school, gave a dinner to the Committee and the Secondary Education Board, Feb. 18, 1943, at which Frank C. Ashburn of the Brooks School said, “We may be private schools, but our function is public. . . . I believe it is our own fault if we have been misinterpreted. Thus far we have failed to evolve a consistent philosophy. Few schoolmasters can explain what they are trying to do or how they are going about it.”

BETTER PROMOTION AND PUBLICITY

The Independent Schools Association of Boston in a printed appeal distributed to their friends and patrons in October, 1942, stated,

“We believe—putting it bluntly—that since the future of the private schools is at best uncertain, everything that can be done should be done to stir the imagination and obtain the active support of the parents, and others, in the hope that thus the chances of our survival may be increased.

“No school should—or can—ignore the changes the war is bringing—some of them, incidentally, most beneficial. No school can rest on its oars. . . . Every school can wisely, for its own sake and for the sake of all other schools, endeavor to bring its parents to feel a sort of missionary zeal for private education and also to have a personal interest in their school—not just take it for granted.”

THE FRIENDS' FUNCTIONS

“The Twilight of Friends' Schools”, by James Forsythe in The Friend, October 15, 1942, challenged the Friends' schools and especially their day schools “for their failure to express Quakerism more adequately to their hundreds of pupils who are not Friends” and for having lost their distinction and become conventional college preparatory schools.

This stimulated a series of letters and discussions in succeeding issues. The editorial by D. Elton Trueblood in the same issue, inspired by Forsythe's article, set up "Three Criteria for Friends' Schools" which may well be applied by other private schools in testing the reasons for their continued existence. "(1) If the sole or chief function of any school is to give well-to-do parents the social advantage of private as against public education, no moral defense of such a school is possible. . . . (2) There can be no moral defense of a private school which is not more free for social pioneering than are the public schools. . . . Those which are not so organized are merely relics and deserve the loss of Christian support which they are bound to suffer. . . . (3) There is no moral defense of a Friends' School which is not providing a genuine religious education which deeply affects the lives of its students."

PROGRESSIVE SCHOOLS OF THE PAST

Even the oldest things that survive in our school practices or curriculum were once innovations. The most conservative of our schools were once progressive. All this was explained in "Progressive Schools of the Past" in the 23d edition of this Handbook.

William of Wykeham in the fourteenth century was an innovator in establishing Winchester as a "boarding school for prospective secular priests" too poor to pay for instruction in the necessary preliminaries to his theological college.

William Cobbett, the political agitator, succeeded in getting grammar introduced in England's schools only about a century ago in order that the common man might better present his petitions to Parliament, holding that "tyranny has no enemy so formidable as the pen".

The English Public Schools, which exaggerate their antiquity, have only been so known for a couple of hundred years, and up to 1840 there were only seven so designated. The foremost of them, Eton, was established by Henry VIII for poor boys.

THE NEW SCHOOL MOVEMENT

The New Schools of Europe derived their inspiration from Dr. Herman Lietz, who had spent a year at Cecil Reddie's Abbotsholme, established in 1889. Dr. Lietz' Landerziehungsheime and other 'New Schools' multiplied in the early years of this century so that in the 2nd edition of this Handbook in a chapter giving the history we listed some thirty-eight then in existence.

The movement was brought to the United States in 1907 by Dr. E. A. Rumely, who established the Interlaken School at La Porte, Indiana, that in its brief history had a considerable influence on other schools in this country. Charles R. Morris, of Milton, Mass., in School and Society, May 1, 1943, tells much of this "Daniel Boone Idea in Education".

THE PROGRESSIVE MOVEMENT

Following the last war there developed the 'Progressive Movement', which derived from many influences. There was Colonel Parker at Quincy and Chicago, and John Dewey who was not uninfluenced by Parker as well as by the pragmatism of William James (cf. "War and Education", Sargent, 1943, pp. 145-160).

There was the Country Day School movement, dating from 1907 though the first was established in 1897, which met a new need. Its origin and history were given in the 14th edition of this Handbook, 1929-30. Demonstration of its practices proved so successful that they have been generally adopted, and now the number of Country Day Schools is diminishing. In the public schools we have had in succession the Platoon system, the Pueblo Plan, the Winnetka socialized recitation, the Dalton Project Method, the Batavia Plan for doing away with grades.

The leaders of the experimental schools were brought together in an Association for the Advancement of Progressive Education. This was headed by Stanwood Cobb, an inspirational idealist, who had taught at Roberts College and in the Sargent Travel School and had been a member and organizer of the Harvard Liberal Club. He and other initiators had the good sense to stand aside and let the movement roll on once it was started. But, as must happen to all such movements, this tide of idealism is ebbing.

CHANGING IDEALS

The ideals and aims of some of the schools must change in adaptation to the times. Head Master Claude M. Fuess of Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, addressing the Middle States Association, Nov., 1942, said, "A few of us headmasters, in sensitive and melancholy moods, have wondered whether without being conscious of decay we have joined the ranks of the unburied dead. Although we have continued in our own fashion to stress accuracy, thoroughness and hard work, we have been damned as being out of date. We have seldom been challenged. Much worse, we have been ignored."

The old idea that accuracy, thoroughness, and hard work for boys was good,—had something behind it. The main idea was "getting rid of sloppiness, getting rid of sin, getting rid of doing things rather more or less". But the phrasing is anachronistic. The scientist, who measures with the most refined instruments, knows there is no such thing as accuracy. Those who know most about a subject know that thoroughness, completeness of knowledge is impossible. And as for hard work, the whole purpose of our advance in civilization is to reduce it or to get larger results from it.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS' FUNCTION

During the fat years of profiteering following the last war too many school men forgot the historic function of the private school. They based their appeal for support on claims that today cannot be substantiated. With the great improvement in public high schools, there are many communities that can give a superior education even more fitting to the times than many of the private schools.

Individualized education has been the claim of private schools which today is challenged by some of the high schools which do more in guidance, in constructive application of psychology at all age levels, than the competing private schools.

Training in a particular religious faith was once the stronghold of many academies in which today the denominational influence has faded, if the school itself has not closed. Training for leadership, another private school claim, has long rested on the higher percentage of leaders among their alumni. But this ignores the fact that they took the cream to begin with.

Prosperous private schools have too long forgotten that originally it was schools and academies that were not supported by taxation that were the initiators, the pace setters, the experimental laboratories in which most of the practices later adopted by the public school were first worked out. Private schools that continue to realize that they have an especial function which cannot be assumed by the tax supported schools, which must meet the demand of the majority,—private schools that are still offering something in which the public schools cannot compete,—will continue.

And new schools will come into existence that will supply new needs. The demand for this has generally come from without, from parents and communities, and will continue to do so. In this most difficult year, when so many private schools were closing, two new schools initiated in the spring of 1942, High Mowing and Hickory Ridge, filled immediately. They had something unique to offer, which parents appreciated. They offered opportunity for children to live richly and to learn as a natural incident of living.

Once the purpose of the school was to prepare for the future life. For a generation or so the schools have claimed that they were preparing for life. In both cases the pupil's present life was sacrificed to something in the future. In both cases the evidence is lacking that those who were responsible have achieved their purpose.

Today we have an increasing respect for the growing individual. We begin to appreciate how little we know about growth, about the development of personality. We are beginning to understand the dangers to which the growing individual is subjected in our cultural environment. We are beginning to realize the damage that may be done and to be somewhat more humble in our attitude as to the good we may do any growing thing other than providing a better environment.

With appreciation of all this, there is opportunity for many more schools, extant or yet to be established, that will permit normal, natural, rich living on the part of the boy or girl, in which learning will come as an incident of doing and discipline as a result of intensive work stimulated by keen interest,—in which the motive power comes from within, not from without.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

"Today America is embarked on a crusade even greater than those between 1900 and 1918", Robert Beck writes in Progressive Education, Feb., 1943. "But progressive education has yet to receive inspiration from this crusade and to relate itself to the crusaders. Its educational aims are not vitalized by the war between democratic and fascist ideologies or by education's role in postwar reconstruction. This fact is attested by the absence of literature on the subject in educational circles but particularly in progressive education circles. The total war's significance could be a major well to tap for the leadership progressive education and all education so desperately need. Our war and peace objectives, if we accept them seriously, not only require a changed society but also new schools and new educational programs."

The present never remains with us. The past we cannot recall. The future comes sweeping on. Of course there is a future! Will the private schools be ready to receive it? Will they play a part in it? That is the question. They always have. That is, private initiative has always made new schools, has kept making the schools new. But this private initiative has usually come from without and probably will continue to so come as in the past.

EIGHT-YEAR STUDY

The last of the five volumes of the series, "Adventure in American Education" (Harper, 1942-43),—"Thirty Schools Tell Their Story",—was published early in 1943. The story of the Eight-Year Study, now completed, runs to a total of over two thousand pages.

INTELLIGENT AND EXTENSIVE

This is both the most intelligent and most extensive study of education that has recently appeared. It has enlisted the activities of a Commission of twenty-eight leading educators of the Progressive Education Association and some scores of additional educators on various subsidiary committees and staffs, and hundreds of experts at a total cost of half a million have studied the results as shown by the records of 1475 students of these progressive schools and an equal number of graduates of traditional secondary schools in their work over a period of years in the leading universities. The study "grew out of a conviction that fundamental re-construction of secondary education . . . must come and that it could not . . . without the cooperation of colleges and universities".

"During the first year the Commission had no funds except $800 contributed in equal amounts by the Francis W. Parker, John Burroughs, Lincoln, and Tower Hill Schools." From 1932 through 1936 the Carnegie Corporation supported the work. Later the General Education Board more generally financed the concluding studies.

Thirty representative secondary schools public and private, both progressive and traditional, throughout the country were released from the usual requirements for college admission for a period of five years. More than three hundred major colleges and universities agreed to this plan.

The first volume, "The Story of the Eight-Year Study", by Wilford M. Aikin, which summarized the results and made recommendations, was published in the spring of 1942 and was reviewed in the last edition of this Handbook.

"Exploring the Curriculum", Volume II, is written by the three Curriculum Associates who worked intimately with the schools for several years as consultants. They believe that "the fundamental purpose of education is not to be measured primarily in terms of mastery of content, but in changes in behavior; therefore, the constant, predictable, and important factor is not the content, but the learning situation". The authors explain the changes in the studies, teaching, and organization that were brought about in the thirty schools as a result of accepting the responsibility of preparing their pupils for college work.

"EDUCATION'S IGNORANCE"

"Appraising and Recording Student Progress", Volume III, by Eugene Smith and Ralph Tyler and others, is in many ways one of the most significant of the series. Eight years of hard thought and study have gone into this 500-page book, and a supplementary report on records has been published. The book described objectives sought and the methods devised of evaluating the results.

"It is amazing that our schools and colleges know little of the results of their work . . . that they seldom attempt seriously to find out what changes schooling brings about in students. . . . It is impossible to estimate the wastage of material and human resources which results from education's ignorance of the consequences of its efforts", Aikin remarks in his foreword. Smith in his preface tells of the preliminary studies that led up to "the devising of methods of obtaining and recording information about personality". Ralph W. Tyler, engaged as Research Director for this study, writes the body of the book.

"WHAT'S IN A 'MARK'?"

Clarifying were their assumptions,—(1) "education is a process which seeks to change the behavior patterns", (2) the educational objectives are the kinds of changes sought, (3) evaluation is finding out to what degree these changes take place, (4) human behavior is so complex that it cannot be measured in a single dimension.

William S. Learned, staff member of the Carnegie Foundation, in the 37th Annual Report, considering "What's in a 'Mark'?", says, "The teacher's 'mark' for a student's performance in course . . . now means both too much and too little. As sole measure of student attainment when other measures are also available, it can not be defended. Even as a supplementary measure, it might well be so redefined as to concern itself rather with the demonstrated abilities and limitations of the individual than with a variable combination of course requirements that are often insignificant."

DID THEY SUCCEED?

"Did They Succeed in College?" Volume IV asks, and the answer is, "They did". To arrive at this, an independent College Follow-Up Staff of six studied the records of 3583 students, about equally men and women, in Harvard, Princeton, Yale, Bryn Mawr, Smith, Wellesley, and some twenty other state and private universities and colleges. 2108 graduates of the thirty schools were included in this number, the others from the traditional schools. "1475 were matched, student for student, with graduates of conventional schools in terms of scholastic aptitude, interests, and socio-economic background." The report deals primarily with these matched pairs.

This is the most human and interesting volume of the series, readably written, not without some witty observations. The report shows that (1) the graduates of the newer schools do succeed in college, (2) intellectual skills are more important for success than traditional content, (3) personality traits with intellectual skills have much to do with success.

Eighteen major comparisons were made between the matched pairs. The graduates of the thirty schools made a slightly higher total grade average, received more academic honors, possessed a higher degree of intellectual curiosity and drive, were more precise, systematic and objective in their thinking, more resourceful.

INDIVIDUAL TESTIMONY

In Volume V, which runs to 800 pages, the "Thirty Schools Tell Their Story" individually of how they carried out this notable experiment. This affords an unusually valuable insight into the atmosphere and working of these individual schools. As about one half of these are private schools open to enrollment from any part of the country, it affords parents an opportunity to make a discriminating selection.

These five volumes constitute a notable monument to the Progressive Education Movement, born out of a "Progressive Era," as Professor Ralph Gabriel of Yale calls the period of Theodore Roosevelt, of the Progressive Party, of Lincoln Steffens. Much that was early written in support of progressive education was sentimental. Some substantial studies were undertaken, but the first full scale study awaited this Commission of the P. E. A.

SCOFFERS AND SCORNERS

The progressive movement for a time depended wholly on the zeal of its inspirers and early adherents. To them the vision was clear though the method was experimental and the objectives often foggy. Orthodox educators remained skeptical, even derisive, or at least dubious, and heaped ridicule upon it. Columbia's eighty-year old Nicholas Murray Butler is still bitter. In his 41st annual report he called it "the rabbit system of education" and ascribed "the present widespread . . . outbreak of crime and disorder on the part of American youth" to the passing of the old system of school keeping. He explained, "The rabbit is at liberty to run about the garden where his life is passed, and feed upon such plants, weeds and flowers as may attract him. . . . To call any such process education is in the highest degree absurd." (Time, March 15, 1943).

That would seem to identify the opponent mentioned by Eduard C. Lindeman in "Education in a Total War", Progressive Education, Jan., 1943. "One of the chief opponents of progressive education recently said in a public address that the attack on Pearl Harbor was an application of the philosophy of pragmatism learned by Japanese in American universities, and that 'pragmatic educators are the fifth columnists in this country'. This certainly is not a part of logical discourse."

INFLUENCES SPREAD

Even the most conservative schools have today been influenced and in some measure adopted something of the procedure, so that in the more enlightened centers the majority of schools public and private are more or less progressive.

Evidence of the spread of the progressive movement is seen in the publications of the Office of Education, which ignored the whole movement while it was growing. Pamphlet No. 6, Education and National Defense Series, in the words of Commissioner Studebaker "attempts to give a concrete picture of democracy at work in elementary schools today". The writer of the pamphlet recognizes that the essential things about democracy are the dispositions and attitudes of individuals, and that these are well established by the end of the elementary school period. To him the elementary school is a "miniature democracy, a laboratory of democracy". That's a picture of the progressive school of twenty years ago, which brought so much scorn and contempt from the authoritarians.

BECOMING STANDARDIZED

The progressive schools eventually became respectable. They were respected and accepted and even became fashionable. Then they had to guard their position, and today have become "very much alike, particularly on the elementary school level", Robert Beck remarks in "Progressive Education in Transition", Progressive Education, Feb., 1943. Methods, curriculum, content, are similar. There is little that is experimental about them. Statistically they are tabulated, academically they are surveyed,—all of which tends toward standardization.

Stanwood Cobb told Beck the inclusion of the word "Progressive" in the Association's title "was dictated by the great popularity attending the word and by nothing more philosophical. The Association had as one of its chief ambitions that of being a clearing house for liberal opinions in education. The character of these opinions was the product of cultural impingements on experimentally-minded persons. . . .

"The movement grew because society was ready for it; because these forces were there to see that it was born. . . . Progressive education is on a plateau today because it has lost many of these outside contacts, because the experimenters of the new age are a new group with whom the educators have not yet established a working relationship, and because the soil is not yet ready for a rebirth of educational experimentation. . . .

"What is needed is more scientific writing by scientists or scientific reporters who would know the problems of education. Closer cooperation between the source-sciences and pedagogy is certainly in order if progressive education, or all education, can be saved from the worship of 'techniques' and methods."

A NEW PHILOSOPHY

Educators, biologists, sociologists, social planners have much to contribute in common, through cooperation, to the future of education. But few of them know what the others are doing and thinking about. Partitions must be broken down, new means of communication established. Human problems must be seen as a larger whole. The problems of training youth must be seen from broader points of view.

Every progressive movement, every new crusade, every promotion of new ideas is a real adventure which calls for leadership, bold thinking and bold speaking, taking risks. But when one pauses to think that probably never yet has a single human being on the face of the earth attained his utmost development and capacity, it is an adventure and a risk worth taking.

Any future philosophy of education should be as human as this. As Beck remarks, "There is much more to philosophy than strengthening the jaw, tongue and mental apparatus. There is a struggle for clear vision rewarding its steadfast followers." We need a philosophy, if you call it that, that will "once again give life-blood, purpose and color to school practices."

Beck, who teaches at the University of Rochester, in the Curriculum Journal, March, 1943, asks, "What Is Progressive Education?" and attempts to follow it back to its origins in America. "The danger of being without direction lurks as an ever-present threat to progressive education. . . . The progressive educator . . . must demonstrate his awareness of the actual problems. . . . It will be impossible . . . if he has no philosophy of education other than a willingness to temporize. . . . The movement itself may be scrapped as unessential in a struggle of cultural survival or in a period of drastic social and educational reconstruction."

THE SCHOOL AND THE COLLEGE

The Fourth Report of the Committee on School and College Relations of the Educational Records Bureau was published in February, 1943. The Committee had made great progress in harmonizing the aims, views, purposes of the better preparatory schools and the colleges, as is shown in the carefully tabulated responses of the colleges to the propositions put before them. In postscripts to the introduction the Chairman, Eugene R. Smith, late of the Beaver Country Day School, nostalgically recognizes that conditions have so changed with the Army taking over control that their recommendations will not carry much weight.

OVERHAULING PREPARATORY CURRICULA

Mr. Smith remarks, "Officials of the United States government are asking secondary schools to make heavy additions (or substitutions) in their curricula, men's colleges are expected to be required to accept and train men assigned to them by government officials irrespective of the way in which they fit, or do not fit traditional entrance requirements; thousands of young men and women are leaving schools and colleges, or not entering them, because of the imminence of the draft and the need for their services in activities relating to the war. One public secondary school, for example, has lost over fifteen hundred pupils in the last ten months. . . . Secondary schools must accept the requirements and even the recommendations of the national government. They can do this only by curtailing to a considerable extent the former curriculum, particularly the traditional one for college preparation."

COLLEGE ENTRANCE REQUIREMENTS

With all the changes the colleges still in a vain effort to demonstrate their individuality continue to lay down a great variety of "patterns of secondary-school units acceptable for admission to the freshman class. The most common requirement is a minimum number of units in English, mathematics, social science, science, and foreign language. Frequently, colleges designate patterns of major and minor sequences or restrict the number of non-academic units acceptable." A survey of 200 representative colleges, including 45 state universities, presents an absurdly unnecessarily complicated variety of requirements and units for the individual universities and colleges. (School and Society, March 27, 1943).

The College Entrance Examination Board in its Bulletin of Information for 1943, April, announces four times a year scholastic aptitude and achievement tests, the latter in selected subjects. But there is no assurance that there will not be further changes at short notice. So about the only way to know how to get in is to try it. What is not acceptable in June may be in August.

The Rev Albert Hawley Lucas, Head Master of St. Albans School, Washington, D. C., at the 56th annual convention of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Nov., 1942, said, "The passing of the subject-matter examinations after continuous use over forty-one years marks the end of an era. It is the hope of many Board members that written examinations in English, Mathematics, Languages, Science, and History will be eventually restored because objective tests can never adequately measure a student's capacity to express his ideas, but we acknowledge that the early selection of candidates for college leaves no method of Board examination available save the objective tests."

HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS TAKEN

The Educational Policies Commission of the N.E.A., late in November, 1942, adopted a resolution urging "that, during the war emergency, selected students who have achieved senior standing in high school and who will . . . profit from a year's college education before they reach selective-service age, be admitted to college and, at the end of the successful completion of their freshman years, be granted a diploma of graduation by the high school and full credit for a year's work toward the fulfillment of the requirements for the bachelor's degree".

"Several colleges, notably Harvard, Dartmouth, and Union, are not in favor of a boy's entering college before he is graduated from high school. Others, among them Princeton, Yale, Amherst, Wesleyan, Bowdoin, will take boys who are recommended as outstanding at the end of 3½ years of high school work. Still others, among them Purdue and Ohio Wesleyan, will take boys at the end of three years. One school, Chicago, has notified us that boys may be admitted to the 'College' at the end of two years of work," writes Rudolph D. Lindquist, Head Master of Cranbrook School, in a pamphlet circulated early in 1943.

Of 439 institutions which replied to the question in an inquiry made by the Journal of Higher Education, April, 1943, "246 (56 per cent) reported that under certain circumstances they do admit students who have not been graduated from secondary school", a few of them stating "that they had been following such a policy for years, and that there had been no substantial increase in the small number of students admitted without high-school graduation".

Columbia will continue to admit only high school graduates, Dean Herbert E. Hawkes has announced. "If colleges admit boys who have not finished their high-school studies, the Freshman year will tend to be reduced to a 'prep' school level, and the competency of the entire new student group will be affected. This projected wartime plan . . . will also have a harmful effect on secondary schools . . . leaving the 'skimmed milk' of the student body. This would result in a serious lowering of scholastic standards all around." (School Review, April, 1943)

Dean Hawkes last November remarked, "The plan would make more headaches than it would cure. Boys would be coming into colleges with a year less maturity and the difficulties of adjustment would be even more serious than they are now. If a boy is in a good high school, he would get more education fitted to his needs by staying there than by entering college before graduation. The discontinuity would be too great." (N. Y. Times, Nov. 23, 1942)

James Marshall, formerly president and long a member of the New York City Board of Education, is quite critical of the war program in the schools. He told the Middle States Association, Nov. 27, 1942, "Even the Policies Commission of the N. E. A. has approved [a shortened] course for some students, at least. I trust that the high schools will not fall into this trap. We know by experience that the high school is not just a place to learn; it is also a place to mature. And cutting short the high school years for most boys will throw them into scholastic situations which they will be unable adequately to handle, because they are still immature."

A different stand, however, has been expressed by President Edmund E. Day of Cornell, who says, "It will give young men a 'toe hold' in college before they enter military service. They will receive training which will be invaluable to them in the armed services, and will receive a taste of education which will help to avoid a 'break' in college education in this country. If we don't do this, college education for the duration is the privilege of the women and the 4-F men. It is better for the country at least to introduce a remnant of able-bodied men to college education."

ACCELERATING HIGH SCHOOL GRADUATION

Another solution is suggested in the leading article in the February, 1943, Catholic Educational Review, an address by the president of Villanova College. The accelerated program in colleges which permits students to complete the course in 2½ years is "bound to have strong repercussions on the secondary schools. . . . With the draft age now reduced to 18 acceleration of some type . . . will soon be adopted generally in secondary schools." He suggests that instead of "arbitrarily chopping off a few months" and letting high school seniors enter college, some form of acceleration be introduced to permit completion of the high school program a year earlier than usual so that "students would be enabled to have a year at college before reaching draft age".

Acceleration, defined as "any change in educational practice which enables or encourages a student to complete one or more stages of his formal education or to prepare himself for entrance upon a position for which it prepares him, at an earlier date than he would normally have done under traditional practice", was the subject of the sixth Quick Survey by the Journal of Higher Education. Results summarized by the editor, R. H. Eckelberry, were published in the April, 1943, issue.

A recent study of college calendar changes made by the U. S. Office of Education shows that "the traditional two-semester or three-quarter plan with no summer session has disappeared from more than four-fifths of the institutions, only 18 per cent of the 947 [who replied] retaining it."

THE TWO-YEAR COURSE

President Hutchins for some years at Chicago has been urging that the liberal arts course be cut in half and the A.B. degree awarded at the end of the sophomore year. The adoption of this plan created a shock of horror among other educational leaders. Walter Crosby Eells, executive secretary of the American Association of Colleges, claimed that the Chicago move would lead to "confusion, misunderstanding, and rivalry" (AP, May 2, 1942). Dean Hawkes of Columbia declared that it would lead to "academic chaos", while President William Pearson Tolley of Allegheny College waxed sarcastic,—“Although Mr. Hutchins complains that the American college boy lags two years behind the English, French and German boy of the same age, it is interesting to note that to overcome this lag he proposes two less years of schooling. If the lag were four years, doubtless it could be made up by cutting out another two years.” (Newsweek, May 11, 1942)

Associate Commissioner J. Hillis Miller for the State of New York, in the Journal of Higher Education, March, 1943, tells why the Regents no longer recognize the degrees from Chicago, —to which President Hutchins tersely replies that since "Chicago is aware that most accrediting agencies think of education in terms of years spent in educational institutions, it has never expected that these agencies would regard fourteen years of education, however good, as the equivalent of sixteen years, however poor".

COLLEGES IN WARTIME

College presidents have been and still are worried as to the fate of their institutions. President Henry M. Wriston of Brown voices the general dismay and uncertainty felt by many colleagues, "Ever since the advent of the crisis, public officials and military officers have directed at the colleges and their students a series of conflicting statements, warnings, threats. There have been almost as many 'errors growing out of procrastinations, indecisions, conflicts of authority, clashes of personalities, lack of understanding' in this matter as in the case of rubber. What is the remedy? It is the same remedy now being tardily applied to the rubber problem—a coherent policy." (Time, Sept. 28, 1942)

President Harold W. Dodds of Princeton in his annual report, fearful of "the unfortunate impression that higher education is more concerned with protecting its institutions than in helping to win the war", urged the colleges to "co-operate with the inevitable". (School and Society, Nov. 7, 1942)

"It was a rare college president" even months later, however, as Newsweek reported, Feb. 22, 1943, "who could be sure what lay ahead for his school—or even whether it would fall or survive in the wartime upheaval of collegiate education."

THE MILITARY TAKES OVER

A National Institute on Education and the War brought together six hundred leaders of the nation's schools and colleges in Washington, August 28-31, 1942, under the auspices of the U. S. Office of Education Wartime Commission. "U. S. educators heard tough talk from their Government this week", Time reported, Sept. 7, 1942. They "were directed to train their pupils in military fundamentals from grade school to college. Manpowerman Paul V. McNutt curtly told them: 'There is no excuse for any young man or woman to be in college preparing for any profession not directly useful to the war effort.'"

Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell told them, "It is the job of the schools and colleges to provide the opportunity for every youth to equip himself for a place in winning the war. You must do this regardless of cost, time, inconvenience, the temporary side-tracking of non-war objectives, or even the temporary scrapping of peace-time courses. . . . Every classroom is a citadel. . . . Out of every 100 men inducted into the service, 63 are assigned to duties requiring specialized training. We aren't getting those 63 specialists. . . . This is your job in this total war. . . . The schools and colleges of America must become pre-induction training centers for our armed forces."

President Roosevelt urged those present, Raymond Walters reported, School and Society, Sept. 12, 1942, "to help us mold men and women who can fight through to victory. We ask that every school house become a service center for the home front."

At Philadelphia, Oct. 20, 1942, a "Special War Meeting of the Association of American Colleges" declared, "The colleges are not interested in 'education as usual' but are ready and anxious to modify their programs in every possible way that will contribute to the winning of the war".

TOUGHER TALK

Still tougher talk was to be heard in the ensuing months as the Army and Navy took over private schools by purchase, leased facilities from the colleges, subsidized the universities for technological or war work.

Small private colleges were having difficulty to figure out "how to escape bankruptcy. 'That's what makes our hair grey and our sleep light', says young President Carter Davidson of Knox College". By February 15, 1943, Time reported, "War has jigsawed and jumbled the traditional picture of U.S. higher education. Colleges find it is upsetting their finances, bollixing their standards, putting new strains on their faculties, bringing them new types of students, converting them into vocational schools and making them, like industry, into virtual subsidiaries of the Federal Government."

Commissioner Paul V. McNutt has predicted that some private colleges may have to close for the duration. "Washington will not dictate a uniform plan of action to the colleges. Washington is not Berlin and we do not propose to regiment our colleges to any standardized program of state-directed services" (AP, Feb. 1, 1943). Regulations governing the program were issued as General Order No. 2 by Paul V. McNutt. (Education for Victory, U. S. Office of Education, March 15, 1943)

Early in February, 1943, the Joint Committee of the Army, Navy, and War Manpower Commission released its first list of 281 colleges and universities tentatively approved as centers for training programs of the Army and Navy. Since then this has been from time to time modified and added to. Every state in the Union, the District of Columbia, and Alaska are represented. (Education for Victory)

GOVERNMENT SUBSIDIES

At M. I. T. some ten acres of floor space have been added in new buildings to carry on government contracts engaging a personnel of 1800, according to President Karl T. Compton's annual report. "Our special war operations are running over three times the rate of the Institute's normal peacetime budget and continue to increase. The teaching and research staff have been more than doubled. During the past year, the total enrollment of students has increased about 50 per cent above normal because of the establishment of special war-training courses." (Technology Review, Nov., 1942)

The University of Chicago in the autumn of 1942 had 103 federal contracts for the training of technicians, navigators, and ordnance officers, "involving thousands of men and millions of dollars", Fortune, Dec., 1942, tells us in "Education for War". At Wisconsin 1200 Navy enlisted men are in the radio school, more studying for Diesel engineers, Army Air Force machinists, and 470 WAVES are learning to be radio operators. 45 new or modified war courses are given on the campus, and ESMWT courses in 33 Wisconsin cities enrolled 4011 students.

Harvard received from the Government in 1942 half a million dollars (Harvard Alumni Bulletin, Nov. 28, 1942). Professor Henry W. Holmes, dean of the graduate school of education, March 4, 1943, told 300 state clubwomen that it would be "serious business for private or state colleges to begin to try to get money from the government" (Boston Herald, March 5, 1943).

TOURING THE COLLEGES

Bernard DeVoto, having finished his second book of the year, made his annual trip among the colleges, of which he tells us from his "Easy Chair", Harper's, May, 1943. "Before starting out on this year's tour of the colleges" he prepared himself "by reviewing the recent public ideas of college presidents" who "are trying to foresee the ultimate effects of the war on their institutions". He found them a gloomy lot, "deeply troubled. Far from being able to foresee the future of their colleges, they cannot even make out what is in store for them from week to week. Liberal education is in abeyance while the war lasts. The business of the colleges to-day is to provide training for the Army, the Navy, and their auxiliaries. . . .

"The changes already wrought by the government are so great that" it is doubtful "if anyone has a really clear picture of them. . . . Everywhere the faculties have undergone violent changes. Specialists are shifted from place to place like Army officers. . . . Teachers of English, history, languages, and the social sciences have had to acquire a hasty competence in long-forgotten or wholly unfamiliar subjects . . . mathematics, science, and especially physics, and the technologies. . . .

"There is a general conviction that the government is in the colleges to stay, precisely as it is in the banks and in industry. . . . Few teachers believe that the colleges will be able to go on after the war without government support. Only the State universities, they say, will have any chance to do so, and it is unlikely that the State universities will permit other institutions to draw federal subsidies without demanding their share—and submitting to the implied control.

REVOLUTIONARY CHANGES

"This will be a change far more revolutionary than any other in the history of American education. Nearly everyone agrees that it means some kind of federal department of education much more extensive and powerful than the present modest bureau. That department will hold the purse and it will therefore exercise control. It is certain to dictate curricula and methods of instruction."

The military have already shocked the college teachers into admitting that their work has been ineffective, vague, tendentious. The military put it precisely, "By the end of so many weeks, we want such and such students to be able to do exactly these things."

"On the whole this has proved stimulating. The profession has never believed it possible to measure its results; it knows that such simple requirements are not a measurement of results, and yet it is exhilarated by being held to them. Most teachers acknowledge that they have learned something and, though determined not to let the idea get out of hand or be applied where it is inapplicable, they believe that the benefit will be permanent."

THE ARMY TESTS

The U. S. Army tests its materials by rigid standards. It also tests its personnel. The Committee on classification has devised a test of capacity to learn, which is not an I. Q. test. Vocabulary and arithmetical reasoning problems test a man's ability to learn. The block counting is a test of ability to reason out a situation. (Clearing House, Feb., 1943)

Columbia's president in his recent report bewails the fact that 68% of college freshmen who took the test for Navy ensigns were unable to pass the arithmetical reasoning test.

STUDENT AND FACULTY LOSSES

Statistics of the decrease in enrollment in colleges and universities rapidly become obsolete. Every class of institution is of course affected not only because of the draft but because of high wages offered by industry and government. This affects not only the students but the teachers.

But one in four of the 18-19-year-old selectees were being rejected as unfit, whereas for the older age groups the percentage rejected was one in three. Col. Leonard G. Rowntree, chief of the medical division of Selective Service, so reporting April 2, 1943, implied that for both groups this constituted a serious indictment of the "faulty school programs" that have characterized American education. But the indication is that "the reduction in student enrollment will be proportionately larger than the loss of teachers". (School and Society, April 10, 1943)

RE-TOOLING PROFESSORS

The "overall drop is less important than the grim shortage of teachers of mathematics, physics and other subjects which students shun in peacetime, flock to in wartime. Answer to this problem is the 'retooling' of professors", Time reported Feb. 15, 1943. Universities are sifting their faculties "for those who, with a little brushing up, could teach other subjects". Professors are "cramming for refresher courses".

With the demand for science and mathematics teachers exceeding the supply, and with teachers in the humanities in a fair way to be out of a job, courses have been devised to prepare them for inflicting on their pupils the doses the military prescribe. From sociology, English, Spanish, German, geology, psychology, classics, art, and philosophy, instructors are in laboratories or under the mathematicians being reshaped. (N. Y. Times, Feb. 14, 1943)

Professor Clyde M. Hill, head of the education department at Yale, in an editorial in School Management suggests that "suitable uniforms or insignia of office" be provided teachers as an inducement to stick to their profession. "The Red Cross has demonstrated the value of the psychological principle involved in such a device." (AP, Dec. 9, 1942)

THE POST-WAR COLLEGE

The Commission on Liberal Education of the Association of American Colleges made public May 22, 1943, a report recommending the adoption of individualized instruction and wider use of original source material, use of achievement and comprehensive examinations, "effective counselling, properly coordinated with instruction, to the end of assisting returning members of the armed forces in making transitions". They recommended the abandonment of the "abuse" of the lecture system, traditional examination procedure "which requires students merely to reproduce information the instructor had talked into their notebooks", prescription of courses "solely for their so-called disciplinary value". (Christian Science Monitor, May 24, 1943)

WHAT THE COLLEGES FEAR

Early in February, Chicago's President Hutchins announced, "Institutions are supported to solve problems selected by the government and to train men and women selected by the government, in fields and by methods prescribed by the government, using a staff assembled in terms of requirements laid down by the government. . . . A government which has once discovered that universities can be used to solve immediate problems is likely to intensify the practice as its problems grow more serious." (Time, Feb. 15, 1943)

Hutchins in his recently published "Education for Freedom" (Louisiana State University Press, 1943) expresses the belief that intellectual bankruptcy is the real threat that war brings to the universities. "Victory," Hutchins states, "cannot save civilization. It can merely prevent its destruction by one spectacular method. Since civilization was well on its way to destruction before the war began, success in war will not automatically preserve it. . . . The tendency is more and more to drive out of the course of study everything which is not concerned with making a living. . . . We are losing our moral principles, but the vestiges remain to bother us and to interfere with a thoroughgoing commitment to amoral principles. Hence we are like confused, divided, ineffective Hitlers. . . . The war will ruin the colleges unless they can think of something a little brighter than 'acceleration' and federal subsidies." Americans don't want "freedom from something". "We want to be free for the sake of being or doing something that we cannot be or do unless we are free."

President Hopkins of Dartmouth has warned, "It would be a tragic paradox if, as a result of the war, we were to allow our system of higher education to be transformed into the type of education which has made it so easy for a crowd of governmental gangsters like Hitler's outfit to commandeer a whole population."

FEDERAL ENCROACHMENT

Both in Britain and this country the question of state-monopolization of private education is being raised. "It is clear as daylight," writes Thomas F. Woodlock in the Wall Street Journal, "that a totalitarian government, whatever may be its form, must reserve to itself the 'education' of the young, just as it must reserve to itself the right of public discussion. Its own existence depends upon control of opinion as well as upon its expression. Hitler was quick to see this; so are the Bolsheviks, so was Mussolini, and so are their imitators everywhere."

Wendell Willkie in his address at Duke University seems to have had some apprehensions when he called attention to "an excessive indulgence in the practice of what is known as censorship and propaganda. Of course, censorship of military matters is necessary in order to conduct a war. But this principle is being daily, if not hourly, abused and extended to many other matters that have no military significance whatsoever. More and more the doctrine of telling us what we should know is being adopted." (AP, Jan. 14, 1943)

Willkie exclaimed, "I have shuddered to hear a member of our government planning, when the war is over, to police the education of our late enemies, after the traditional manner of conquerors. To disarm those enemies, yes. To take whatever measures are necessary to prevent rearming, yes. To remove from the necks of the people an enslaving totalitarian rule, certainly. But having done that, education is another matter. It must grow out of and carry on a native culture. To determine the nature and manner of their own education is the right of men everywhere. And alien ideals superimposed by force will only produce resentment and hatred." (Chr. Sci. Monitor, Jan. 16, 1943)

Willkie told the students at Duke that "so important are the liberal arts for our future civilization that I feel that education in them should be as much a part of our war planning as the more obviously needed technical training". He warned us that if we continue to convert the "liberal arts" colleges into military or utilitarian institutions we will be putting out the lamps of civilization as surely as the Nazis have.

In the Spring, 1943, issue of the American Scholar, Willkie wrote, "If we are to risk our lives for freedom, we must at the same time do all we can to preserve the deep springs from which it flows. The preservation of our system of liberal education during the war will make an enormous difference in the moral and human tone of our society in the future, of the very atmosphere in which the peace is made. . . . In pleading for the humanities I am not preaching any gospel of highbrowism."

LIBERAL ARTS THREATENED

The threats to 'liberal education' are distressing many educators, particularly those in the small liberal arts colleges which the war caught wholly unprepared. Columnist Bill Cunningham, who has been much around the country, writes of the war's effect in the 'Ivy Colleges'. The "student body turned bewildered and even bitter. Its emotional readjustments took every form from pacifist meetings and abuse of 'war mongers' to mass petitions to Washington. This type of college had nothing to offer a youth faced with military service but its blessing." (Boston Herald, Oct. 18, 1942)

"Members of the General Staff of the Army made it clear that they saw no wartime importance in liberal education, and some of them went so far as to assert that, in their judgment, liberal arts colleges had no peacetime value either", writes President W. H. Cowley, president of Hamilton College, in the Dartmouth Alumni Magazine, May, 1943. "The independent colleges may find the going very hard indeed", but he believes "that the war has created for the supporters of the independent colleges the greatest opportunity in our national history for the reorganization and rejuvenation of both liberal education and the independent college".

President Seymour in January, 1943, maintained that "Yale's regular educational program . . . must be continued throughout the war for those qualified and able" and that this program "is a fundamental service to the nation". The governing body in 1942 had issued this protest and warning,—“The Corporation wishes to impress upon Yale graduates and upon the general public the danger of the impoverishment of the nation's mind and soul, should the less tangible values of our culture be allowed to shrivel while our energies are devoted to the task of winning a war to maintain them. Of what worth is freedom from want, if our minds be on a lower intellectual level; or freedom from fear if we have a less cultured life to defend; or freedom of speech if we have poorer thoughts to express; or freedom of religion if we bring a less enlightened faith to the worship of God?”

President Conant's 1943 report presents, in the words of Raymond Moley, an "amazing picture of what the war means to a great university". Unequivocal is Conant's acceptance that "education as usual" is finished for the duration. Hopeful is his confidence that the liberal arts studies will "weather" their "period of hibernation" (Harvard Alumni Bulletin, Jan. 30, 1943). Conant holds that a "student reared on deficient spiritual and intellectual diet is an easy prey for proponents of the totalitarian view" (Boston Herald, Feb. 22, 1943). In Germany in the thirties the material diet had something to do with it.

CHALLENGED

"Are we going to sit back and let the armed services tell us that 'Liberal education is out for the duration'?" asks Edward B. Rooney, Director of the Jesuit Educational Association (Nation's Schools, April, 1943). But apparently he realizes that they are, that the time to ask is past, for he writes, "Had educators been more insistent on their right to have their say in the beginning, perhaps there would be less confusion in the educational scene today. . . . The war's challenge to educators, then, is a challenge to show vision and courage." But the challenge has not been accepted.

"It is good to hear that, amid the general and ignominious surrender of our colleges to the military raids of the government, there has been some protest and resistance. The dignity of our educational institutions, to say nothing of their obligations to the high standards of culture in a democracy, would seem to bind them to the continued service of their appointed tasks. But when the government stepped in and took over, the colleges simply collapsed," writes John Haynes Holmes, Harvard alumnus, pacifist and preacher, in Unity, May, 1943.

"But there were two exceptions—Earlham College, a Quaker institution at Richmond, Indiana, and Adrian College, a Methodist school in Adrian, Michigan. When the word came that they must turn over their facilities to the military, these colleges refused, thereby putting to shame such great and powerful seats of learning as Harvard and Princeton."

"MAY THEIR TRIBE INCREASE"

Defending the "shocked and astounded" colleges against Col. E. A. Fitzpatrick's accusation that they "are not war-minded, they are still college-minded", Harl R. Douglass in School and Society, Nov. 7, 1942, protests, "Whereas two years ago the typical college student's attitude was, Why should we fight wars for imperialistic tory England . . . ? the attitude by December 1, 1941, was one of willingness to do his part and by July 1, 1942, one of eagerness". But resenting Fitzpatrick's implication that all except immediate wartime courses are "leisurely . . . academic . . . futile", Douglass urges that "In our efforts to win the war we do not unnecessarily destroy values that are useful for other purposes or that we do not follow superficial leadership and actually weaken our war effort. . . .

"There will . . . be some, albeit a small number, of true educational statesmen, wise and courageous, who will not succumb to the temptation to be optimists or grandstanders, and who will steer their ships firmly between the reefs of academic inertia and tradition on the one hand and temporary expediency and superficiality on the other. May their tribe increase."

JARRED INTO REALISM

There is little question but that the colleges and universities needed a shaking up, and the military are giving them just this. This has jarred some of our university presidents into a more realistic attitude.

President Melby of Montana State University, in Education,

Feb., 1943, warns us, "In the past we have been content very largely with verbal forms of education. We have judged the success of educational efforts in terms of what pupils knew. This lack of educational realism places us in a weak position in the present crisis, for we are likely to proceed on the assumption that the solution of the problem is to be had merely through more education when what is really needed is a different kind of education."

President L. D. Coffman of the University of Minnesota declares, "The colleges of America have so differentiated their offerings that it has been practically impossible for a student to receive a liberal education in any field. This differentiation of subject-matter in college circles is the counterpart of the division of labor and the specialization of life in the world outside. . . . Courses are now being introduced with a view to providing students with strict synthesis and general overview of the fields of learning that is essential to the training of liberal and cosmopolitan minds." ("The Challenge to Higher Education", Education, March, 1943, by L. B. Schmidt)

President Hopkins of Dartmouth asserts, "The world today is suffering from uncoordinated thought. Never was there more brilliant thinking and never was thinking more productive of accomplishment, but . . . a man's scholarship or another man's industrial leadership or still another man's financial genius may be outstanding in his field and yet be entirely without discriminating judgment in regard to public policies or concerning the responsibilities of citizenship. . . . There are but few whose experience has given them any contemplation of life in its fullness or whose contacts with life have been broad enough to qualify them for undertaking these responsibilities" of harmonizing specialized interests. (Quoted by Schmidt, Education, March, 1943)

HUMANITIES' FUTURE

In "The Future of the Humanities", Harper's, March, 1943, William Allan Neilson dourly spreads gloom and foreboding. He tells us that in November, 1942, the American Council on Education surrendered, but what else could they do? "Educators are not prepared to assert to military authorities that the 'intangible values' of a liberal arts education would make soldiers better fighters".

This, he explains, was part of the preamble to the plan accepted by the American Association of Colleges at a meeting attended by five hundred presidents and deans. Since then the military authorities have ridden rough shod over them. "Education in the liberal arts for men is out for the duration." This is "a heavy blow", but it offers an opportunity to those "now free to concentrate their attention on the future of these . . . intangible values”.

That “the American parent” has not been too much taken in by these ‘intangible values’ is shown by “much talk about the alleged failure and confusion of aim in our higher education. . . . Enough noise has been made to create a fairly widely diffused skepticism. . . .

“The core of the humanistic tradition has been the study of antiquity.” But few of the humanists are much interested in archeology, still fewer in paleontology. Their antiquity only reaches back to Homer’s time at most. It “has assumed that the knowledge of Greek and Latin is fundamental”, though written history and literature is rich enough at any rate in Sanskrit, Pali, Chinese, of which the classical humanist is ignorant.

Moreover, Neilson reports it is claimed that “less than five per cent of the students who begin Latin in school” can use it “as a key to unlock the treasure house”. Some would think that a much smaller percentage would be a fairer estimate. The “idea that we get a solid foundation for English grammar by the study of Latin is of course a fallacy”, which Neilson explodes. The pedant’s dislike of translations “is in part a kind of snobbishness due to the sense of superior literacy”.

The idea that the study of English grammar does other than impede one in speaking or writing his language is equally obvious for those who are not blind. But it takes war and waste to sweep away the accumulated rubbish of the centuries.

LOSS OR GAIN?

“The great fear of the universities today is precisely that of the most backward industrialist or most forward laborer: What are we going to lose?” writes George Boas, Johns Hopkins professor of philosophy, in “Priorities in Education”, Atlantic, Jan., 1943. “If enrollment in the humanities is decreasing—which as a matter of fact is not true everywhere—in favor of ‘technical’ courses, the reason for it is that technical courses prepare a man better for military service than courses in the humanities do. That is the answer and it ought to suffice. . . .

“When a civilization gets so feeble that it has to be lectured about and written about and taught in classrooms, one would be pretty shrewd to guess that that civilization is at best moribund. . . . Everyone struggles to retain his past as one of his most precious possessions. To be able to let go is an ability which only a few sages have. But whether one have it or not, one is going to be forced to let go, and the proper question is not what one is losing but what one is gaining.”

'LIBERAL' OR 'FUNCTIONAL'?

On the "Survival of the Liberal-Arts College" President Clement C. Williams of Lehigh University writes simply and straightforwardly in School and Society, April 24, 1943. Most of them, he seems to think, had just as well succumb unless they make some changes. "'Liberales artes' . . . 'freeman's arts' became invalid when all men became free", but the retention of the obsolete term has tended toward a college which "is chiefly a federation of vocationalized departments in which an academic 'freeman' might by diligence find a catholic education but in which most students specialize in some field having a market value. . . . The general college of most large universities is an academic omnibus carrying not only traditional learning but miscellaneous etceteras . . .

"The dead hand of the liberal-arts ideal has too long ruled our education to the exclusion of an understanding of man and of human relations. . . . The continuance of the egoistic-subjective viewpoint of the 'liberal' concept so long in the modern close-order world that is agonizing for social accommodation, the proper aim of higher education, has inhibited group understanding. . . .

"Stanford and Chicago are the two prominent universities that have undertaken a rational reorganization on the basis of functional analysis." As a possible result of the shake-up brought by war, "the college might be analyzed into its component areas and each placed in its proper place in the educational scheme pointed primarily toward human relationships. Methodologies would become less subjective and more observational. Foreign languages might find their justification in international discourse rather than in doctoral dissertations."

DEATH THROUGH MALNUTRITION

The war's "menace" to higher education, however, exists most, President Williams points out, "in the further impetus toward national socialism following in the wake of war. During hostilities, government takes control of private activities for the sake of effective belligerence, and, once acquired, such controls tend to adhere to politics. . . .

"If well-established independent colleges go down, they will not fall as true 'casualties of war', they will be casualties of socialistic encroachment. . . . Euphemistically they might be called casualties of war just as many a gallant soldier is so considered even though he dies of infection or malnutrition in an unsanitary camp. . . . If colleges of worth and strength should not survive, their demise will be owing to unsanitary economics back of the lines."

FOUNDATION WISDOM

Criticism and abuse is heaped upon those who direct the distribution of largesse, which it is believed exerts a restrictive influence on educational institutions and educators. But from some at times come light and wisdom.

CARNEGIE REPORTS

Walter A. Jessup now occupies two presidential chairs, having succeeded to Keppel's. In his report as president of the Carnegie Corporation he tells of contributions to the war effort.

In the 37th annual report of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching he tells how much education is in the talk of people of both England and America. He recounts how "from the beginning the American college has changed with the times. Theocratic domination gave way to democratic domination. . . . This adaptability has facilitated the use of college staffs and equipment by government and industry. . . . College calendars have been scrapped. Courses have been deleted. Promotions are slow. Appointments are deferred. How the puzzle will look when the parts are reassembled later no one can tell."

Though there has been competition among the 1700 colleges and universities with their million students, they "respond to the same set of public pressures. . . . One-fourth of the American people are year in and year out, enrolled in schools of a formal nature. . . . We are so accustomed to schooling that we meet every crisis by adding to our provision for education. The heart of our present military endeavor is schooling. Every camp is a schooling center, whether it be for 'rookies' or for officers. Men are 'conditioned' mentally and physically for the war through schooling. . . . The colleges were among the first agencies to be called to assist the defense activity". It was in the colleges that conditioning had been carried farthest, so that they were best adapted to the new conditioning necessary.

ROCKEFELLER REVIEWS

Raymond B. Fosdick also heads two foundations. For the General Education Board he issues his Annual Report, for the Rockefeller Foundation "A Review for 1942". As usual there is unusual breadth and inspiration in his writing, as well as far-seeing humanitarian implications in the way the Foundation's money is spent. The eight millions appropriated for 1941, he remarks, would pay "current war expenditures of the United States Government for approximately forty-five minutes". The greater part of this money went for the promotion of public health, medical, and natural science, a lesser portion for social sciences and humanities.

"In this Review, three years ago, under the heading 'Night Over Europe', an attempt was made to describe the disaster which the war was bringing to the universities and laboratories both in England and on the Continent. The processes of disintegration had already begun. Institutions dedicated to the extension of knowledge were being geared into the war machine."

It will be recalled that President Conant of Harvard in rejecting the invitation to participate in the 500th anniversary of Heidelberg University upbraided the German universities for their desertion of the humanities.

LENGTHENING SHADOWS

"Today the long shadows of the blackout are lengthening inexorably over the United States. . . . Our universities are now instrumentalities of total war. Technology is left as the one subject which must be taught. History, economics, literature, philosophy—the whole range of the social sciences and the humanistic studies—have been crowded out of the picture . . . Our young men are not to be trained in liberal understanding. . . . Their education must be an education in violence. Their participation in the cultural and social heritage of civilization is adjourned. . . . We are sacrificing values which, once they are lost, are not easily regained. . . . Fundamental research, except as it relates to the demands of war, is being curtailed or abandoned."

He tells us what the news sources have not, that work has ceased on the 200-inch Palomar telescope to search the galaxies and on the cyclotrons at Berkeley and elsewhere to explore the atom. "And this is only the beginning . . . the end is by no means in sight. . . . The treasure of learning and the liberal tradition cannot be reassembled . . . nor can scientists, doctors, scholars, philosophers and artists be fabricated over night.' The dead and the psychotic are not our only loss. Among the six million prisoners behind barbed wire, many a trained mind denied of intellectual food, is undergoing decay.

A SICK WORLD

"In a world as shaken and shocked as is ours, psychiatry must inevitably play an increasingly important part. . . . In such a situation one would expect a large number of psychoneurotic casualties in the civilian population. . . .

"Over the last decade the Foundation has appropriated $11,500,000 for the development of psychiatry, both at home and abroad. In 1942 more than half of the money which it spent in the medical sciences was for this purpose. . . .

"On all sides, we hear the counseling of those who urge the necessity of hate as a psychological prerequisite to victory. But the insistent voice of reason tells us that violence and hate cannot serve as foundation stones with which to build a new world. . . . The mood of violence, resulting from war, tends to continue long after the actual fighting has stopped. It continues not only as a way of looking at old enemies but as a philosophy of life and conduct toward others, whether they be nations, races, groups or individuals . . . Hate is like a chronic disease which does not lend itself to a quick and easy cure; and violence, if too prolonged as an accepted technique, can become a deeply set mental habit. . . . The world must slough off its mood of violence if it expects to have a rational, healthy future. . . .

"It is surely not too soon to discuss the problems of peace, which will prove even more difficult than the problems of war. Nor is it too soon to plan for the return from the mental attitude of violence and begin the formidable task of the teachers, the philosophers, the clergy, the journalists, the statesmen, the poets, the novelists, the social scientists. . . . Upon these men and women must rest the burden after the war for our mental disarmament."

The problem, Fosdick says, is "How can the social adjustment of millions of human beings be arranged with less frustration and inequity?" Or as Willkie put it, "Nothing of importance can be won in peace which has not already been won in the war itself." ("One World", Simon and Schuster, 1943)

THE CASTE SYSTEM IN EDUCATION

Opposition to private schools flares up periodically, based on the claim that they are not democratic. Often that protest comes from idealists who feel frustrated that their ideals of democracy have not been realized. Perhaps they are not realizable. Reality should come first.

The descendants of pioneering Americans have been loath to acknowledge even economic classes, though under the Puritan hierarchy in early New England the caste system was as marked as in the Old World.

Democracy means many things to many men, and its meaning changes with the times. At best it is an abstraction or an ideal. Briefly, it was a thing abhorred by the founding fathers, standing for the rule of the mob. To the idealist of today democracy stands for freedom for the individual man. But a realistic view of present tendencies seems to indicate that, though the word 'democracy' is more in men's mouths than ever before, the freedom of the individual is threatened from many directions.

INEQUALITIES IN THE COMMUNITY

We have been long hampered by some false ideas that all men were created equal, which we try to justify today by the explanation that they were created unequal but that we should grant equal opportunities,—by which we generally mean, when we have simmered it down, opportunities equal to the individual's capacity to grow. Certainly very few men have yet come to maturity on the face of this earth who have reached the full capacity they might have attained had the influences about them been more stimulating, more inspiring, less frustrating, less damaging.

Now a more careful investigation into the nature of our community life, of our social system, has disclosed as the result of careful statistical inquiry that not only do men not have equal opportunities in this great democracy, but that there is a well established caste system, in the toils of which we have been so closely enmeshed that we have been unable to see it.

REGIONALISM

Recent regional studies by sociologists and psychologists have revealed our caste system. One of the earliest studies along this line to attract attention was the Lynds' "Middletown", a study of Muncie, Indiana, carried out in the year 1929, with a resurvey ten years later, "Middletown in Transition". The early regional studies of Howard W. Odum, now professor of sociology in the University of North Carolina, led to study of the caste system in the deep South and also gave rise to the growing study of regionalism, a phase of human ecology that relates human behavior to environmental forces.

Following these and inspired by them, more recently there has been a series of studies supported by the Yale Institute of Human Relations, typical of which is John Dollard's "Caste and Class in a Southern Town".

The rise of these ideas on regionalism and functionalism in the past two decades has been followed in reviewing these books here mentioned in former editions of this Handbook.

FUNCTIONALISM

All these studies apply the methods of 'functional anthropology', the "new science of human relations". The functionalists' great contribution, as explained by Eliot Dismore Chapple and Carleton Stevens Coon in their "Principles of Anthropology" (Holt, 1942), "has been the realization that human institutions are founded upon and must be explained in terms of the behavior of human beings as organisms". This stems from the early work of Malinowski, but W. Lloyd Warner "put this idea to the test, and extended the field of anthropology to include ourselves". This new approach has been made familiar to us in Ruth Benedict's "Patterns of Culture" and Margaret Mead's "Growing Up in New Guinea" and "Coming of Age in Samoa".

The functional approach assumes that behavior is determined by uses, ends to be accomplished, and that those ends are determined by environmental influences. Functional anthropology then is essentially equivalent to human ecology, which includes the study of all the influences on man. Once all these studies were comprised in theology, out of which came our moral and natural philosophy, from the latter the many subdivisions of science which we have today. But ecology comprehends them all so far as life is concerned and shows us that the subdivisions of science are artificial and temporary, that all life is one.

"Human Ecology" (Oxford, 1935) by J. W. Bews is the first book on the subject, which is all-embracing, dealing with man's "functional relationship to his environment . . . not merely physiological but psychological as well. . . . While in one sense, ecology is merely a view-point, in another sense it is the most complete science of life, since life is not a thing itself but a process. . . . The ecologic view-point regards life as an interaction between the environment and man as a living organism. . . . The result is a habit of mind, a mode of thinking, a general 'philosophy of life'. The ecological attitude of mind is one which is of great practical importance because it assists in the solving of the innumerable everyday personal problems of adjustment which are encountered by all of us. . . . Life apart from the environment does not exist "

But in every form of life there are castes, the primary ones those that have survival qualities and those that lack them,—the quick and the dead.

CASTE AND CLASS

Another series of studies owes its origin to W. Lloyd Warner, who studied caste and class in an aboriginal Australian tribe. Under his direction was carried out "Deep South: A Social Anthropological Study of Caste and Class" by Allison Davis, Burleigh and Mary Gardner. Sponsored by the American Council on Education were similar studies on "Color and Human Nature" by Warner, Junker, and Adams; "Children of Bondage" by Davis and Dollard, and "Growing Up in the Black Belt", by Charles Johnson.

Warner's disciples, Buford H. Junker and Martin B. Loeb, have applied his methods with similar results to "The School and Social Structure in a Midwestern Community", referred to as 'Hometown', School Review, Dec., 1942. In this typical small city centering about one industry and surrounded by farm lands, the investigators discovered "a community with six social levels, each having somewhat different standards of behavior. . . . Children learn class behavior in three interacting ways: (1) in the family; (2) in the schoolroom; and (3) from other children, through play and social activities in and out of school. How the school fits the child into the social structure is shown" by statistical studies analyzed and tabulated.

YANKEE CITY

These same methods Warner, with a large staff and ample funds, has applied to a settled New England community, Newburyport. The results are to be published in six volumes under the general title of "Yankee City", the first two of which have already been published.

The first volume, "The Social Life of a Modern Community" (Yale University Press, 1941), summarizes the results that are to be detailed later. "Economic organizations are found everywhere. The simple horde of Australia . . . organizes the food gathering or productive activities of a hunting and gathering people in a set of relations as does a modern factory in Yankee City. . . . Economic structures control the technology by (1) organizing its use in production and (2) dividing the goods . . . or, if . . . durable, determining their use and place in the social system." In most societies the church,—or whatever relates the everyday world to the supernatural,—is "all-pervading".

"The school, as a separate institution, is a very recent phenomenon in the history of society. Considered as a part of the age-grading divisions of the non-European societies, however, it is extremely old and in all societies forms a part of the larger systems for orienting the young to the social tradition. . . . Subordination of the younger to the older generations permits the mature to indoctrinate the young with the social behavior of the group. The young are dependent upon the old for learning the social tradition and for acquiring their social status."

SOCIAL STATUS

The second volume is "The Status System of a Modern Community" (Yale, 1942), much of which is summarized in a short paper, "The Educative Effects of Social Status", Warner's contribution to a symposium on "Environment and Education" held in connection with the 50th Anniversary Celebration of the University of Chicago (Supplementary Educational Monographs, Number 54, March, 1942, University of Chicago Press). The other three contributors were Ernest W. Burgess, Franz Alexander, and Margaret Mead.

"All modern learning theories involve the notion of the birth of an organism of a given species into an environment with which, during growth, it continually interacts, thereby achieving adjustment. The accumulated adaptive changes in the behavior of the organism are said to be what the individual learns. For us to know what takes place in the learning process, it is absolutely essential that the nature of the organism and the nature of the stimulating environment be understood."

HUMAN BEHAVIOR AND ENVIRONMENT

Psychologists studying human behavior have arrived at some confusion because "they take no account, or a most inadequate one, of the environment which organizes and largely controls human learning. The human environment is a twofold phenomenon. It is a physical world and a social world. The evidence is conclusive that human learning is primarily a matter of the growing organism's learning how to behave as a social being and that the stimuli which motivate human action are almost wholly social, interdependent, and intricately organized."

The psychologists have too much ignored "the social environment which organizes the social learning for the human individual". Sociologists "have failed to provide them with systematic investigations of the social environment in which learning takes place. . . . All societies, whether they be the simple organizations of primitive man or the complex structures of modern America, consist of individuals in interaction." Such interconnected relations are those of parent and child, husband and wife, groups in factories, schools, colleges, and cliques.

"The people, by their own values, tend to rank themselves in higher and lower orders. Class, caste, and every form of hierarchical group are usually present. Knowledge becomes a thing highly prized since it is an instrument of adaptation among men of diverse types who are faced with the problem of understanding one another. . . .

SOCIAL SYSTEMS

"The social systems of American communities . . . provide the stimulating environments that control our behavior, determine our school and educational system, and dictate what we learn and how we learn it."

Warner at the beginning "assumed that the economic order was of greatest importance in the lives of the people", but a detailed study showed that "the members of this community are greatly influenced by a social-class order in which they look upon people as being higher or lower on the rungs of the social ladder. . . .

"The top group of the upper class is an aristocracy which values birth and family in preference to wealth. The lower-upper class stresses wealth and social climbing. Members of the upper-middle class are money-conscious, saving, and successful—the 'joiners' and those who take it upon themselves 'to run things'. The lower-middle class includes the little people who, with small jobs, are comfortable. Those in the upper level of the lower class, many of whom are skilled workers, are felt to be ambitious by those on the lower level. The lowest stratum is believed to be shiftless and lazy, and most of the individuals in it are not social climbers. . . .

USE OF EDUCATION

"Education everywhere in America may be used as a device for social mobility. An individual also may climb socially by marriage; by the proper symbolic use of wealth; or by the socially proper use of beauty, talent, and intellect. . . . Despite the practical use of education, our formal American educative system is built on the principle that all men are created equal and that somehow or other, through Divine Intelligence or the Democratic party, we ought to stay that way."

But the school boards are in the hands of the upper classes. The teachers are of the middle class. "There were four curriculums in the high school. . . . The evidence is clear that the class system of Yankee City definitely exercises a control over the pupils' choices of curriculums. . . .

"No statement could be further from the social realities" than that "there is plenty of room at the top". "Of the seventeen thousand persons individually stratified by the Yankee City study, only 3 per cent were in the combined two upper classes and only 10 per cent were in the upper-middle class. The remaining 87 per cent were in the lower-middle and the lower classes.

"If the school system is to perform its proper function and adjust children to the existing social structure, it can permit only a very small proportion of the lower classes to rise by educational mobility, since the truth is that there is plenty of room only at the bottom of the social heap."

The classification of pupils in the junior high school according to intellectual capacities and distribution among the four curriculums corresponded in general with the percentages of the whole population in the six classes.

TOWARD A DEMOCRATIC ORDER

"Our school system has been delegated the task of socially orienting our children to the world in which they must later live as adults. As American citizens, all of them must learn how to behave in the general culture. They must conform to certain of our democratic ideals. . . . On the other hand, these children, when they are adults, must adjust to the class system in and about them."

The faults of the American school system "are so obvious that even professors hidden away in graduate universities know that faults exist. . . . On the one hand, it provides a general education for democratic living and, on the other, trains children to fit into our class order. It should be clear to those who object to the undemocratic part of our schools that reforms cannot be achieved in our educational system unless the general society, in which the school operates, is transformed into a truly democratic order."

WHAT YOUTH WANTS

Warner's ten year statistical study of the effect of our caste system on education in a settled New England community is supported by Elmo Roper's survey of youth, reported in Fortune, November and December, 1942.

A survey by personal questionnaire was made of "a faithfully balanced cross section of high-school students . . . ten million strong", who are "about to inherit the future". "Their opinions are not to be dismissed because of their youth". Their responses showed "fewer doubts" and less evasion than adults.

SECURITY AND TOTALITARIANISM

The Fortune editors find in the student responses "a passionate devotion to personal liberty compounded with a desire for the guarantee of personal security".

This conflict between the desire for security and freedom was reflected in the willingness of 70% to give up the right to change jobs or to earn more than $3000 a year, and the unwillingness of 82% to give up freedom of speech or religion. That is, for a promise of these they would give up economic and personal freedom, which indicates that youth is fit food for the dictator.

That's a dangerous situation, as was pointed out and forecast by George S. Pettie in "The Appeal of Totalitarianism" in "American Youth: An Enforced Reconnaissance" (Harvard, 1940). It is the situation on which Hitler and other dictators have built their power by guaranteeing security and then putting liberty in the background.

"Their way of thinking was one of political conservatism flushed with social liberalism of the most enlightened kind," Fortune reports. Over 54% believed our form of government so near perfect that no important changes were needed. 40% believed our government "needs to be thoroughly revised to make it fit present-day needs". Only 4% believed there should be a radical change.

CASTE ATTITUDES

In response to the question, would the country "be better or worse off if we had no rich people", two-thirds of all thought "worse", and as to what constituted rich people, one-half expressed the opinion that those having an income of from $10,000 to $50,000 came in that class. There was considerable variation in response.

In analyzing the answers to such questions and to questions on the rights of labor and the privileges and abuses of labor unions, it was deemed necessary to subdivide students' families into classes or castes, such as "prosperous and upper middle, poor, Negroes, executive and professional, labor". The attitude for the different classes varies greatly. Only 5% from prosperous and upper middle class families would give the unions more power, from poor families 13%, Negroes 25%.

There is no use of the term 'caste', no direct recognition of it, but the recourse to these subdivisions is tacit admission of our caste system,—higher and lower and out-caste. The attitudes of the students depends not wholly on scale of income, but on caste, as Warner brings out.

FUTURE DISAPPOINTMENTS

"The great majority of our high-school students look forward to better things in adulthood than most of them will get. More expect to go on with their education after high school than can possibly be accommodated. The number expecting to be earning in a few years salaries that are way above our present per capita income far exceed the number that could possibly hope to achieve such salaries, short of dollar inflation. And, most serious of all, more than a third of our youth plan to enter the professions that, with crowding, now include less than 5 per cent of our adults, while only 11.8 per cent of them plan to go into farming or factory work or mechanical and other skilled trades. . . .

"Unfortunately or otherwise, it is extremely unlikely that anything like 57.8 per cent of our ten million high-school students will, as they hope, go on to a higher education, either when they leave high school, or when they are released from the armed forces, or at any other time. But they expect to. It is likely that more than 26.1 per cent will go to work at some time without further schooling. . . .

"The proportion of students expecting to go to college (49.5 per cent of the 57.8 per cent who expect to continue their education—equivalent to 28.6 per cent of the total youth group) is startling and, of course, way out of line with the figures for college attendance." But among the Negroes the majority look forward to going to work.

Therein lies disappointment, frustration, maladjustment, opportunity again for the man who can promise, for the dictator. Walter M. Kotschnig's "Unemployment in the Learned Professions" (Oxford, 1937) showed how a similar situation in Germany, youth dissatisfied, unemployed, made possible the overturn, brought about the present regime.

SECURITY PREFERRED

Again the insecurity of our social system and its effect on the family lives is reflected in the choices expressed in answer to another question. 47% would prefer a job at low pay which they were sure of keeping, 30% a good income with a 50-50 chance of losing, 22% high income with a chance of failure. On this the girls were less venturesome, more cautiously conservative than the boys.

But on the caste basis, low income security was preferred by 68% of Negroes, 60% of poor, 58% of children of laboring parents, and 33% from prosperous and upper middle class families. Good pay at 50-50 risk was preferred by only 13% of Negroes, 24% of poor, 36% of prosperous.

"There's no particular surprise in the revelation that the children of parents belonging to groups too frequently the helpless victims of insecurity should elect for their own futures a safe though uninspiring way of life. . . .

"It doesn't add up to any sort of working reality—it's got too many of this, too little of that, and not even a skeleton force for an industrial and agricultural nation. Youth is not to be blamed for the discrepancies, nor is necessity to be blamed. But somehow these two must manage to compose their differences. Breakdowns of the answers are packed with sociological interest. About 30 per cent of the Negro students expect to go into teaching or nursing. Of children of farming families only 15.4 per cent say they will go into farming; of children of laboring families, only 15.8 per cent say they will go into factory work or skilled or mechanical trades."

GETTING INFORMATION

High schoolers are fairly well satisfied with their teachers, and they think they are pretty well informed by their schools on present day happenings, the way the government is run, and in how to make a living. "Here is an amount of approval that probably is not fully deserved. The questions that tested students' knowledge show that schools emphatically do not do a good job at teaching government and public affairs, and analysis of the answers to them suggests that most of what youth knows on these subjects may be self-taught."

In response to the question, "Where do you get most of your news?",—57% named radio, 35% newspapers, 20% talking.

"This again suggests that a student's own personal habits and preferences have a lot more to do with his level of general knowledge than has his schooling. The responsibility for this certainly lies heavily upon the high schools of the country.

"Moreover, students apparently want their schools to serve as forums on subjects current in the world around them." 73% reported that they believed teachers should "discuss things like communism, fascism, and nazism in class". "It seems just possible that if high-school students could write their own tickets for curricula they would reach graduation better prepared to become citizens and voters than they are now."

CRITICIZING THE SURVEY

Alan Griffin, professor of education, Ohio State University, surveys the Fortune Survey in Progressive Education, Jan., 1943. He welcomes Fortune's effort and hopes that "other agencies may be stimulated—or irritated—by its findings into conducting more defensible studies of what is happening inside the experience of American youth. The only adequate answer to the Fortune Survey is a better survey—or several of them."

Well, what does Professor Griffin consider wrong? "The flat statement that four-fifths of our high school students are poorly informed or uninformed . . . the inadequacy of this 'measuring stick' to support any such general categories . . . the uses to which these categories are put in other parts of the survey."

"The catch to the Fortune Survey" is that it suggests "not merely a correlation but an actual causal relationship between being 'well-informed' and holding relatively conservative views on" labor and labor unions.

Fortune's declaration that "in many instances, knowledge in one field is found to have a profound effect upon opinion in an irrelevant field",—"is sheer jabberwocky. There could easily be a 'correlation' between opinion and utterly irrelevant knowledge: one might, for example, discover that persons who could name three books by Charles Dickens were fond of horseradish in twice as many cases as were those who could not. . . . But a sheer correlation only suggests the 'possibility' of causal relationship."

THE DYNAMICS OF HISTORY

In announcing the project in the October issue, the Fortune editors wrote, "Our generation has the unique privilege of witnessing a new world struggling to be born—during this year and the years immediately to follow. Never before have the forces for change in all human affairs been concentrated within so narrow a span of time, nor have they ever run so deep or spread so wide over the six continents."

The "many sociological forces now at work will together make up the dynamics of history at a time when history is moving with unprecedented speed. They will be brought to earth and translated into our lives in terms of economic problems to be encountered and material solutions to be found. Thought-changing factors that concern the social philosopher will become tangible in terms of collisions between pressure groups representing new class antagonisms. . . .

"Whatever the shape of that new world will be, most of us will live to see it, and the people of our period will have been its parents . . . Is the present prosperous class being liquidated, do its members believe they are being liquidated, and if so how does this affect their way of thinking about government and the kind of society they expect their children to live in?"

These questions arise from what happened in Russia where the middle and upper classes were completely liquidated. Only the peasants and working men survived. Today the country "is ruled by and composed almost entirely of people whose parents had no property, no education, and only a folk heritage", Willkie tells us in his "One World" (Simon and Schuster, 1943).

THE WRITING OF LIVE HISTORY

The editors of Fortune conclude, "The sum of these findings will be a history of our time written while it is true and tangible, and not deriving from a historian's backward-looking theories as to what forces may have combined to produce what results. Such an investigation as this has never been attempted before."

That's a worthy purpose on Fortune's part, to write the history of the living. History in academic circles has been restricted to the dead. It is a kind of paleontological research into fossil propaganda. It is safer for the academic historian and for those who support him to keep him on things dead. The quick might be too dangerous.

A departure from the academic, the first of which I am aware, was Richard Heindel's study of the influence of America on English opinion in the early part of this century. "The American Impact on Great Britain: 1898-1914" (University of Pennsylvania Press, 1940) is an admirable example of the scientific method. Directly from the mouths and writings of English public men, journalists, and publicists, he takes the live and pulsating prejudices or attitudes of the day. But even such a study, restricted to a period before the first World War, is too dangerous for appreciative consideration in academic circles or in the important book review mediums.

But there is a great popular demand for this kind of writing, bringing history up to date. Sheean's "Personal History" was much more than personal, started a whole school of commentators and correspondents writing about contemporary as well as their own personal affairs. "Getting U S Into War" (Sargent, 1941), a contemporary record and survey of the easy steps, the "small decisions of each day", by which in two years we traversed the road toward war, met with an enthusiastic reception. Our universities and foundations miss a great many opportunities.

YOUTH'S PROBLEMS

The progressive falling off in enrollment in educational institutions during the past decade or so has attracted attention to the effect on the birthrate of the first World War and to problems that face the next generation. Proportionately in our population the young are decreasing in number as the birthrate falls and life is prolonged for the aged. Proportionately they have less opportunity to own land or property as concentration goes on in the hands of the experienced older men.

Killings will further decrease the younger. 31,000 were killed and 4,650,000 injured last year, the Liberty Mutual Insurance Company announces. Though there is less speed on the highway there is more in industry. But such figures fade in importance as the casualty lists are announced and the government warns us that 900,000 casualties may be expected soon, a foretaste of what's to come.

POPULATION TRENDS

The recent upturn in the birthrate has been stimulated by the war and conscription, Technology Review, May, 1943, points out in summarizing "The Trend of Affairs". "Recent Census Bureau announcement of an upswing in the birth rate in the United States—population gain during 1942 was at nearly twice the average annual gain for the decade 1930-1940—is properly discounted on the ground that such increases are war-time phenomena. . . . With the return of peace, restoration of the trend . . . may be foreseen, if indeed . . . not . . . earlier."

Our population increased 30 per cent decade after decade in the early years of our country. About the time of the Civil War it began to slacken and by the 1920's it was down to 16 per cent, and for the decade ending 1940 to 7 per cent. In "The Road We Are Traveling: 1914-1942" (Twentieth Century Fund, 1942), Stuart Chase summarizes this trend.

"The lagging population curve is due primarily to the fact that children are economic liabilities in high-energy societies. In handicraft days they began to help around the farm as soon as they could walk. Let the reader ask himself what economic contribution to the family livelihood his children have made, at least until they have finished school."

TRENDS IN OWNERSHIP

"Democracy as we know it is primarily the product of the wide diffusion of landownership, the product of free or cheap land. Yeomen have not played a dramatic role in the pageantry of American life. But it was in the minds and hearts of these yeomen, pioneers in both a physical and spiritual sense, that the great American dream took form, the vision of a land of freedom and equality", the editors of the Elementary School Journal, April, 1942, remind us.

In "the past half-century . . . we have changed from a rural to an industrial, urban civilization". From sixty years ago up to 1935 the percentage of farms operated by tenants and croppers had increased from 26 per cent to 42 per cent, and the increase has since been rapid in the Middle West. In seven southern states 60 to 70 per cent of all farmers belong to the tenant class. Farm operators owned in 1935 only 39 per cent of the value of their properties. The rest was covered by mortgages held by banks.

The 1940 census as studied by Edgar Schmiedeler in Rural Sociology reveals that 34.3 per cent of farm lands are operated by 1.6 per cent of the farmers. 14 per cent of all land is farmed in tracts of 10,000 acres or more. Owners and renters have progressively been dispossessed, become "habitual migrants", as pictured in Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath" and told more realistically in the investigations of the Tolan Congressional Committee, retold by Carey McWilliams in his recent books. The results have been much the same as "was strikingly the case in England at the time of 'the inclosures', as witnessed by Sir Thomas More's description in his 'Utopia'."

The editors of the Elementary School Journal conclude, "Forces are operating which make it increasingly difficult for a large percentage of the farmers of the nation to gain or to hold title to the land that they work. To climb the ladder from laborer to tenant and from tenant to owner is no longer easy. When all factors are taken into consideration, it appears that farm youth in the future will find landownership a receding goal."

"A NEW CLASS STRUGGLE"

The great sociologist, E. A. Ross, a decade ago predicted that the advance of medical science in lengthening human life would prolong the leadership and control of the old men in all places of responsibility.

The Harvard anthropologist, E. A. Hooton, more recently warns us, "The world is largely run by middle-aged and elderly individuals whose dispositions, bodily health and mental processes are presumably affected by senile changes. . . . If the course of world events is to be altered because this old man has an enlarged prostate, that one has high blood pressure, and the other has gastric ulcer or a wife going through the menopause, we have reason for desiring a somewhat fuller knowledge of the range, exact nature and general implications of bodily decline." ("Apes, Men and Morons", pp. 245-6)

In "A New Class Struggle: Youth Versus Age", Paul Niven reminds us, "The greatest obstacle toward a realistic attempt to solve our economic and political problems is the fact that the press, the radio, and the cinema industry are controlled by men suffering from involuntional mental disturbances. . . . The young men, also, are neurotic. Theirs is an anxiety neurosis. They are afraid of an uncertain future. . . . If and when American fascism comes to fruition it will do so because the morale of American youth has become impaired through frustration. . . . The United States is literally a country of old men's ideas; a country wherein the philosophy of old age, the psychology of old age, the phobias of old age, the neuroses of old age, and the prejudices of old age predominate. The United States continues to be led by old men whose mental processes have been solidified in the grooves of medieval theology." (Social Frontier, Jan., 1938)

The problem of youth has become what to do with the old men. Their increase has brought into prominence a group of sciences. Gerontology seeks to understand. Geriatrics deals with their abnormalities as pediatrics does for the young,—the problem of handling and disposing of not merely the useless but the harmful aged.

YOUTH VERSUS AGE

Gerontocracy, the rule of the aged, becomes more and more ominous to the young. That's the problem of youth, to put the old men in their place and to take up the burden before they mess things up. It is the old men who, brought to a dead stop in their diplomacy or financing, call on youth to pull them out of their troubles. In international affairs aged diplomats, as wicked as experienced, come to the end of their rope, and war begins. It is the only out for them.

"The clamor of the aged for economic security is heard throughout the breadth of the land. This clamor will be louder", Edward J. Stieglitz tells us, writing on geriatrics in the Technology Review, June, 1941. "The median age of the population will probably be forty-four years in another half century." As the expectancy of life increases with improved living conditions, the proportion of older people in the population becomes greater and greater. As the age of conscription is lowered and the age limit is raised for those who sit at the throttle, the problem becomes more and more pressing.

"Education, which is preparation, has not kept pace with these changes in the social order. Educational curricula are still geared to the day when life expectancy was fifteen or twenty years less than that of today; when education to prepare the boy or girl for the competition of adult life sufficed. Neither parents nor teachers have taken cognizance of the necessity for preparation for old age. They have assumed with complacent smugness that the adult would learn how to grow old gracefully, happily, and usefully without training or aid."

WHAT YOUTH FACES

What our schools and colleges face is fewer youth to educate. There would have been suspension for many, if the Government through the Army hadn't taken over. What youth faces, so far as it survives, and future generations so far as they are born, is an increasing percentage of old men. Stuart Chase in "The Road We Are Traveling" tells us, "While we now have 45,000,000 young people under twenty, in 1980 we shall have only some 34,000,000. . . . Where we have 9,000,000 citizens over 65 today, by 1980 we shall have 22,000,000."

In the editorial "Trend of Affairs" in the May, 1943, issue of Technology Review we read, "From 1930 to 1940, the number of people 65 or over in the United States rose from 6,633,805 to 8,956,206—an increase of 35 per cent as against an increase of but 7.2 per cent in the total population. . . . Measured over a longer span, the figures continue significant: In 1900, people 45 years or over made up 17.8 per cent of the population of the country; in 1940, they constituted 26.5 per cent. Estimates of the Bureau of the Census, which assume no net immigration and assume continuation of present trends, foresee 40.4 per cent of the total population in 1980 as being 45 years or more in age. . . .

"Prime Minister Churchill put the problem in these terms recently: 'In 30 years, unless present trends alter, a smaller working and fighting population will have to support and protect nearly twice as many old people; in 50 years the position will be worse still'."

In view of Mr. Churchill's clear sighted warning, it behooves the old people to discipline, condition, robotize youth to the end that they will fight and work to support the increasing number of old. The old men must, while they can, increase and centralize their power through national control of educational facilities, through more education of the conditioning kind.

This is what youth faces. What will it do? In a few more decades perhaps we will have private schools for re-educating the aged. Perhaps Bernard Shaw had the solution for it in his "Back to Methuselah".

ENLISTING EDUCATION FOR WAR

"Never before in the history of world conflicts have the universities, the technical schools, the vocational schools, public and private, been so important to the immediate task of winning a war", declared Paul V. McNutt, Chairman of the War Manpower Commission, in the broadcast which took the place of the cancelled convention of the American Association of School Administrators. "The schools are shouldering all burdens offered them. . . . Increased teaching of mathematics, the sciences, English, geography, and physical fitness in the high schools is providing qualified manpower for a technical war. The colleges and universities training these young people are helping to turn them into the best-educated officers and soldiers and technically trained men for war industries that the world has ever seen." (School and Society, May 15, 1943.)

BOMBARDED WITH BULLETINS

The schools, public and private, have been bombarded with bulletins and educational literature from state departments of education and from numerous Washington agencies,—for Civilian Defense, the Manpower Commission, the Office of Education. Educational periodicals and addresses at public meetings are largely devoted to enlisting the interest and time of pupils and staff in the war effort. The subjects dealt with are diverse, training for war industries, pre-flight aeronautics, civilian defense, the democratic way of life, pre-service training, teaching suggestions especially in mathematics, physics, languages, navigation.

"The ordinary school administrator must be puzzled, if not actually bewildered, by the variety of suggestions that have come to him from official and quasi-official sources." (Editorial in the School Review, Feb., 1943.)

There is some sense amidst the fury, but most of the writing is evidently a task job, prolix, repetitive, frowsy, deadly to critical thinking. Educational literature is not generally marked by brilliance or conciseness, and college teachers become bureaucrats have not improved in zest or mastery of their theses.

L. H. Stimmel, professor of English at Colorado State College, writing in the Journal of Higher Education, Jan., 1943, gets from the written product "the impression that Education is filled with second-raters. . . . Reading pertinent articles in various educational magazines" he finds them when "highly intelligent . . . almost wholly unintelligible. One of the most important" he had "to read twice, for the material in it was valuable, but in three thousand words there was not one concrete sentence. . . . But this dullness, this triviality, you say, is in imitation of the strongest traditions of . . . scholarship."

THE VICTORY CORPS

The High-School Victory Corps, under the U. S. Office of Education, has grown into a considerable movement. Announced in Education for Victory, Oct. 1, 1942, official biweekly of the Office of Education, "endorsed by the Army, Navy, and the Commerce Department", it set out with two 'aims': "immediate, accelerated, and special training of youth for that war service they will be expected to perform after leaving school" and "active participation of youth while still in school in the community's war effort". 'Objectives' were given as: "(1) Guidance of youth into critical services and occupations; (2) wartime citizenship training to insure better understanding of the war, its meaning, progress, and problems; (3) physical fitness; (4) voluntary military drill for selected boys; (5) competence in science and mathematics; (6) pre-flight training in aeronautics for those preparing for air service; (7) pre-induction training for critical occupations; (8) community service including training for essential civilian activities."

The general booklet "High-School Victory Corps" published last fall was the first of a series on the Victory Corps, available through the Government Printing Office. "Extensive aids in the form of study guides, motion-picture films, science exhibits, posters, and forum outlines are now available from the U. S. Office of Education and from universities, private publishing houses, and educational associations." (Educational Records Bureau Newsletter, Feb., 1943)

"Of the 1,300,000 boys in American high schools between the ages of 16 and 18, it is estimated that about 80 per cent are headed directly for the armed forces. Some 40 per cent will be in the air forces, 32 per cent in the land forces and 8 per cent in the naval forces. The remaining 20 per cent, physically unsuitable for the armed forces, will, many of them, go into production and community services. The High School Victory Corps . . . has been widely adopted as a visible symbol of the desire of high school students 'to get on with the war'. In some quarters it has been criticized as a scheme of a Federal bureaucracy to dominate education and to deprive 'high-school children' of a liberal education." (Paul E. Elicker, Ex-Secretary, National Association of Secondary-School Principals, N. Y. Times, May 23, 1943)

THE INDIGENOUS HIGH-SCHOOL

George Johnson, professor of education, Catholic University of America, gives an excellent analysis of the Victory Corps idea in "War and the High Schools", Commonweal, April 30, 1943. "The American high school is the most indigenous unit in our school system. Sandwiched between an eight year elementary school that was made in Germany and a four year college largely borrowed from England, it is the creature of the nation's resolve to give as much general education as possible to the largest number of young people. . . . Elsewhere in the world secondary education has ever been the badge of class distinction and has operated to perpetuate differences of status in the body politic. "At the moment there is real danger that the tradition of liberal education in the American high school may become a war casualty. The requirements of the armed forces, as well as the needs of industry, have just about snuffed out the light of higher learning in the colleges; the liberal arts seem to be out until the war is over. . . . It is high time that the American people be made aware of what is beginning to happen in their secondary schools. . . . "The United States Office of Education is glorying in the fact that the federally sponsored program of vocational education has gone to war. . . .

"In the autumn of 1942 it began the promotion of the so-called High School Victory Corps. This began with an idea, innocent enough, of doing something to coordinate the demands that the various federal agencies were making on the schools. It has developed into something more ambitious. . . .

PRESSURE AND MECHANIZATION

"At the start, the Office of Education insisted that the Victory Corps was no more than a suggestion that it was offering to the schools as to a possible way of motivating their work during wartime. However, as time has gone on, it seems that it is becoming something more. . . . A bill pending before the Congress . . . would give to the Office of Education some $12,000,000 to use for the purpose of assisting the states 'to adjust the organization and curriculum of the high schools to a program for the preparation of high school students for wartime service' The bill also provides that the whole program would be controlled by the Office of Education through State directors of the High School Victory Corps and supervisors in the above mentioned fields [physical education, pre-flight aeronautics, mathematics, physics, chemistry], all paid out of federal funds.

"Such pressures as these are hard to withstand. The federally sponsored programs appeal to students. There is something exciting about them." But "these soldiers of ours . . . these sailors

... these workers in our factories are first of all human beings. It is to make it possible for human beings everywhere to live as human beings that they are fighting and working. They themselves must not become dehumanized in the process.

"The lights began to go out in Europe when the tyrants threw the culture of the ages out of the window and mechanized the schools. They wanted workers, not thinkers, pawns to push about at will, not dreamers. They feared the human quality in men and women. . . . They developed an education that was intended to guarantee economic production and military power. They wanted none of the learning that nurtures the flaming desire to be free.

"Those who believe that our secondary education should be more completely mechanized reminds us to the point of boredom that we are living in a technological age and facing an even more technological future. . . . Man has fashioned the machine and perfected it marvelously, but he has not yet learned how to live with it. It has upset the whole economy of his existence. . . . What we have not yet learned is the art of living in a technological age in such a way as to develop our full potentialities as human beings. . . .

PERMANENCE OF CHANGES

"It will be argued that the adjustment of the high school curriculum to war needs is only a temporary measure, that, once the emergency is over, the liberal studies will assume their accustomed role. The answer to this is that it may be a long, long time until the war is over; as a consequence, several generations of high school students may be deprived of the opportunity to become acquainted with our basic culture."

"The Permanence of Wartime Changes" in the secondary school curriculum is questioned in a leading editorial in the School Review for May, 1943. "Now the confusion seems to be abating, and there are indications that a second phase is at hand. Critical or evaluative activities, which were, of necessity, partially suppressed during the initial stages of reorientation, are now receiving more attention. Perhaps it is not too early to begin speculating on the possible permanence of some of the recent innovations."

Frederic Ernst, associate superintendent of New York City schools, is quoted to the effect that all these changes "give impetus to the movement of making the academic high-school curriculum much more practical than it has been in the past. Many of us must admit that this change has been all too long delayed. The academic tradition is still too strong in our high schools."

INCREASING CENTRALIZATION

The tendency toward centralization of educational control has grown progressively. Traditionally education for Americans was a matter of local control. Originally the Federal Government had no part in education. The people surrendered none of their local rights to control education, and consequently the subject is not mentioned in our Constitution. With the unifying of the nation there has gone on continuously and rarely suspected a centralizing of education.

EUROPEAN INFLUENCES

"The beginning of the educational renaissance came in the sixties, and can be traced" in part "to leaders, most of them trained abroad", Morison and Commager tell us in "Growth of the American Republic", Vol. 2 (Farrar & Rinehart, 1942).

"A significant aspect of the educational renaissance was the development of facilities for graduate study in the United States. Prior to 1880 students desirous of pursuing their studies further than the master's degree were forced to go abroad—generally to German universities. The leaders of American education in the post-Civil War period were for the most part German trained: the universities of Gottingen, Jena, and Berlin were particularly influential." Harvard led the way when Eliot, a chemist, who "had spent some time in Germany", became president. Gilman, establishing Johns Hopkins University, followed German models and used German trained specialists.

THE GROWTH OF DEMOCRATIC EDUCATION

"In 1870 Americans spent 63 million dollars on their public school system; in 1910, 214 million dollars, and in 1920 over one billion dollars—a sum greater than the entire expenses of the national government from its foundation to 1880 with the exception of the Civil War years. In another decade this figure had more than doubled. In the half-century from 1870 to 1920 the per capita expense for public education rose from $1.64 to $9.80; the expense per pupil, from $9.23 to $48.02, and in the next ten years, to $90.22.

"Even more striking was the progress in secondary education, indicative of the increased prosperity of the American people, and the assumption of responsibility for a complete educational system by the state. In 1890 there were only some 350,000 students in the secondary schools of the entire country, of which over one-third attended private schools. Twenty years later there were over a million pupils in the public high schools, and by 1930 the number had increased to about four and one-half million."

American faith in education has tended to harmonize educational ideals and practices for the whole country. The inevitable diffusion of ideas would alone tend in this direction. The tendency today to reduce cost and improve instruction by consolidation of school districts and centralization of direction is, however, by no means general.

In 1933 there were 127,000 district boards with 423,974 school trustees who legislated and acted as executives on educational affairs. This democratic system holds out in the farming states, and in hundreds of towns and cities the school boards still serve as training schools for local politicians. In Illinois there isn't even a state board to supervise. Time, Jan. 4, 1943, reports "The toughest obstacle to school consolidation in Illinois is its archaic patchwork of 11,957 autonomous board of education (there is no state board), which are a minor but profitable branch of politics. Today their schools, even though they have only three pupils, get state aid based on a minimum of 18. . . . One thousand Illinois schools have closed recently because poorly paid teachers are taking war jobs. Most of the shutdowns are one-room rural schools—the 9,703 one-room schools of Illinois outnumber any other state."

BEGINNINGS OF FEDERAL AID

As early as 1785 the Federal Government in distributing its public lands west of the Alleghenies, reserved "lot No. 16 of every township, for the maintenance of public schools within the said township". Much later, assignment of lands made provision for advanced technical education. This was the first step toward the establishment of state universities. A Federal Bureau of Education was established only after the purchase of Alaska in 1867 in order to provide for the education of the Alaskan Indians. Incidentally this bureau was given supervision of other federal expenditures for education throughout the nation.

In the midst of the Civil War the first Morrill Act, introducing military training as a 'war emergency' measure, entered another federal wedge, as Arthur Moehlman points out in the Nation's Schools, Feb., 1941. Vocational education soon became a vested interest and, though meeting with strong opposition, continued to receive Congressional appropriations, which were greatly increased at the time of the first World War. Moehlman goes on to trace the process of federalization,—“These vocationalists were smart strategists. They cleverly used the drift to war to emotionalize their program as a defense measure. President Woodrow Wilson signed the Smith-Hughes Act early in 1917. . . .

"Public education from the interest of the state is fundamentally social propaganda for the conditioning of the immature and the reconditioning of the mature to acceptance and belief in the patterns of the past as, subject to popular approval, they are retranslated in each generation by the executive personnel involved. He who controls the processes of public education will control the shape of things to come."

A CONDITIONING PROCESS

In the Educational Forum, March, 1943, Carroll D. Champlin emphasizes this same idea. "Education is always a process of conditioning, which can profitably be borne in mind as we think of the needs, desires and hopes of college freshmen."

This point of view of Moehlman's and Champlin's is shared by sociologists, but educators have been all unaware of it. The shape of things that have come, the present emergency, is due to the control of the processes of public education during preceding years. If there is the slightest truth in this, it is a subject that should be carefully investigated that we may better understand. These centralizing and conditioning tendencies have been more fully dealt with in this Handbook, 26th ed., pp. 93-100, and the 25th ed., pp. 27-28.

Paul R. Mort, who under the auspices of Teachers College is carrying on an investigation of means for "making greater use of the assets of home rule in education and ways to avoid its shortcomings" (N.Y. Herald Tribune, May 16, 1943), in the Teachers College Record, Dec., 1942, under the title "Adapting Our Schools for Tomorrow", tells about what they are doing today.

FEAR OF FURTHER FEDERAL ENCROACHMENTS

Further federal encroachments are feared by Moehlman, who in his May, 1943, issue opposes the N. E. A. federal aid bill (S. 637). This provides for $200,000,000 for teachers salaries and $100,000,000 for more teachers and the equalization of educational inequalities between the states. The bill states, "No department, agency or officer of the United States shall exercise any supervision or control over any school or state educational agency, the administration, personnel, curriculum, instruction, methods of instruction, or materials of instruction".

But, Moehlman adds editorially, "After this strong statements, $1,500,000 is generously appropriated to the Office of Education to administer the bill. The proposed appropriations represent roughly an increase of 10 per cent in expenditures for the operation of schools." In "Popular Control of Education Is Vital to Democracy", Nation's Schools, August, 1942, he had pointed out specific dangers.

In the May, 1943, issue he points out, "Taxes paid locally and to the state are deductible from personal income taxed by the federal government. High local and state taxes, therefore, have fewer disadvantages than heretofore. State and local governments have never been in a more favorable position to increase their tax revenue to support education, health and public safety."

Even the poorer states have "sizable surpluses in their state funds" and still maintain "thousands of submarginal school districts . . . always in fiscal difficulties. . . . It is doubtful whether the state or federal governments should be asked to subsidize inefficiency to satisfy vested economic-professional-political interests. . . .

"The most dangerous area of federal control is in the instructional field whether over teaching materials, methods or personnel. To anyone who has studied the increasing controls over teacher training and classroom teaching under the Smith-Hughes and George-Dean acts, the proposed federal aid bill is potentially too dangerous to be considered at this time."

MEETING MILITARY DEMANDS

In the secondary schools boys and girls are being given a tremendously increased amount of mathematics. It has been forced upon the schools by the military. The amount that they must cover in a given time is laid out and the process is speeded up.

THE CALL FOR MATHEMATICS

In "The Nation Calls for Mathematics", School Science and Mathematics, Feb., 1943, William L. Hart, of the University of Minnesota, notes that after the war there will be a reduction in this expansion, and he hopes it won't wipe out the whole thing. "At any time, decently informed educators would have been ready to admit that mathematical training would be important for some officers and enlisted men in the armed forces and for some men in industry. . . . Few people, even among mathematicians, originally had a proper conception of the tremendous extent to which mathematics would prove useful."

Time, Jan. 5, 1942, declared, "Mathematicians have long been haunted by a paradox. Although most U. S. citizens profess to dread the study of mathematics, they are suckers for mathematical puzzles, made a best-seller of Lancelot Hogben's 'Mathematics for the Million'. The mathematicians' conclusion—the trouble is not with mathematics, but with the way it is taught."

ELIMINATING THE USELESS

In detailing the "Essential Mathematics for the War Effort", William D. Reeve, professor of mathematics at Teachers College, Teachers College Record, Feb., 1943, advises omitting all obsolete material, adding "certain important things to bring the courses up to date" and making "use of applications of the essentials to genuine problems". Much may be omitted in arithmetic, much of fractioning, decimals, denominate numbers, square and cube root, extended computations. Add the story of our numerals, applications to home and civic life. In algebra, geometry, and trigonometry, there is similarly a long list of suggested omissions.

S. S. Mayo, Director of Research and Counselor, Sequoia Union High School, Redwood City, California, in "Toward More Functional Mathematics", Curriculum Journal, Nov., 1942, also emphasizes "the need for better understanding of the principles of arithmetic and for more skills in the fundamental processes. . . . The Army and the Navy, trades, industries, and professions" are making demands that "are a direct challenge to the newer curriculum of the elementary and secondary schools".

WASTEFUL TEACHING

The U. S. Office of Education, in response to "urgent and repeated requests", in December, 1942, "in cooperation with the President of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics appointed a committee to make a survey of the mathematical needs of the armed forces and upon this basis to make a report concerning what the schools can do for the emergency".

From the report of this committee, "Pre-Induction Courses in Mathematics", presented in the March, 1943, Mathematics Teacher, we quote: "The Navy operates nearly a hundred post-induction schools, and the Army a far greater number. An analysis of the various technical manuals used in these schools provides convincing evidence that much time is now wasted teaching simple mathematical principles and skills to many men who ought to know these things when they are inducted."

The committee recommends a wide range of mathematical teaching. It advises, "It is wasteful to put pupils into such courses if their aptitude and abilities indicate that they cannot obtain a secure mastery of the material they are studying. It should be remembered in every case that unless the mathematics taught is mastered thoroughly, it will neither be of practical use nor will it serve the other purposes of mathematical study. . . . Accuracy and skill in application must be a main consideration, not the amount of material covered. . . . The mathematics taught should be practical."

A long list of topics to be omitted is given for arithmetic and informal geometry. What is desired is evidently not drill in meaningless work but some comprehension of the language of size. The influence of this report should be lasting and good. But there is little evidence at the present time that this is likely to accomplish a fundamental change in mathematics teaching as the war is doing for modern languages.

WHO NEEDS MATHEMATICS?

A broad grasp of advanced branches of mathematics is essential, of course, in any kind of research, designing, engineering, in aeronautics, ballistics. But the aeronaut, the artillery officer in the field, like the navigating officer on the ship, has little use for mathematics. The mathematics work has all been done for him. Everything is tabulated. In a flying plane he cannot work on mathematical problems. On board a ship he must catch the sun or the star when the weather permits and use the shortest way to work out his position, and that is done almost wholly by reference to tables, which are revised every year and which are the result of decades of intensive and accurate mathematical work.

This mathematical training will probably actually be used by a very small percentage. The rest of the time, aside from its disciplinary value, may be regarded as wasted. But there is good reason why the military should recommend mathematics. It is an excellent method of conditioning for military life. It calls for application, concentration, accuracy, and keeps the mind fully occupied and eventually wearied so that it is not likely to inquire into other things that would have little value for the military officers.

LANGUAGE IN WAR

In "Language Teaching Goes to War", School and Society, April 3, 1943, Charles Rumford Walker of Wellfleet, Massachusetts, writes, "Thanks to new, intensive methods of teaching thousands of Americans—many of them in uniform—are learning plain or fancy foreign languages four times as fast as was thought possible before the war. We're doing this because, suddenly, we've got to. . . . We need fluent, practical linguists. . . . Even in our colleges something seemed to be wrong, for graduates with honors in French often found they could not hold the simplest conversation with a Paris taxi driver."

"Spanish and Portuguese, for instance, are among the easiest of languages for us to learn, but . . . when the Board of Economic Warfare combed the 48 states for experts who also spoke Spanish, it dug up only 115.

MAKING UP FOR LOST TIME

"The new methods are making up for this long neglect with dramatic speed. After nine weeks of intensive instruction in the language school at Laramie, Wyoming, one graduate was sent on a mission to South America. Two months more in a Spanish-speaking country, and he was giving a course of lectures on United States civilization, in Spanish. . . .

"An American Army colonel inspected a class in Siamese at the University of Michigan only three months after it began. The colonel, who had spent 22 years studying languages in the Far East, found the students in a brisk give-and-take conversation with natives. 'I don't believe my ears!' he said; 'they're talking like native Siamese!' An educated Russian, visiting a six-weeks-old intensive Russian class at Yale, exclaimed: 'How gifted Americans are at languages' . . .

"The most novel feature of this method is the use of a native as well as a teacher in the same classroom. The native, untrained in teaching, sticks to his own language and often knows very little English. His job is to give sounds and words for the students to imitate. The first weeks are spent largely on correct pronunciation and the memorizing of basic words and sentences. . . . The teacher, highly trained and often an American, guides the class, corrects students, helps to save time, shows how vocal cords can be made to produce difficult sounds, explains as much grammar as is necessary to speed progress and not a bit more. For the object . . . is not to pass an examination or get a degree, but to understand natives, and be understood by them, as rapidly and thoroughly as possible. . . .

LEARNING BY SPEAKING

"All children master the basic structure of a language, no matter how queer and exotic, by the time they are five", Walker reminds us. "Which suggests there is nothing very abstruse about language learning. And as children, we all learn to speak before we learn to read. Every language was spoken through nearly all its history by people who could not read or write. . . . Learning to read a foreign language before learning to speak it is not only less efficient—at times it is a serious handicap toward practical mastery."

This pragmatic demonstration of how to learn a language, the only way, by using it, by hearing and imitating one to whom it is native, is the method by which languages are learned by every individual during the second and third years of life. Essentially it is the method by which the waiters and shopkeepers of the Continent learn to use with facility three to five languages. Probably very few of the youths who are studying Hausa or Siamese will ever have an opportunity to use them, but this demonstration should and may show the futility of modern language teaching as it has been in our schools and colleges.

ELECTIVES OR 'NEGLECTIVES'?

The war has jarred the language teachers out of their rut. But some still think nostalgically of the old days of a decade or more ago when the modern languages were accepted as a means of mental discipline and a smattering as evidence of culture.

W. N. Rivers, addressing high school teachers of foreign languages at Washington (Modern Language Journal, April, 1943), bewails that "languages are no longer electives . . . but 'neglectives' ". For this situation he berates his fellow teachers for not promoting or defending their vocation. "For twenty years, while teachers of mathematics and foreign languages were asleep under the weight of moss-back dignity and self-sufficiency accumulated by years of no competition, these creatures, sometimes called educational astrologers, succeeded in casting a mesmerizing spell over American education by figure-flinging, by a sorcerous use of words akin to Mumbo Jumbo, and by some streamlined crystal-gazing on aimless aims, objectional objectives, and curricula contortions. These educational alchemists, like the money-eyed members of chambers of commerce, struck the heaviest blows from without against languages and sent them into a nose dive that has been accelerated by the present war. Other outside causes could be mentioned, but these three are sufficient for orientation. The causes within the language group, for this decline, seem to have been as deadly as those without. For many years, the prestige and tradition achieved academically by languages remained unassailed and unquestioned."

THE 'GIFT FOR LANGUAGES'

Americans have long complacently assumed that they had no 'gift for languages'. They had little urge, need, or incentive, as have the Hungarians or the Swiss, surrounded by nations using many languages.

"In the postwar planning by governmental and private agencies, world co-operation looms large", says Carl H. Milam, executive secretary of the American Library Association. "And the United States is assigned a dominant part of the responsibility in the cultural fields as well as in economics and politics and military affairs." Perhaps in time we will become multilingual.

The program of the Foreign Trade Education Committee, of the National Foreign Trade Council, dealing with the need for broader foreign language study in American educational institutions, asks for instruction not only in French and German but in Italian, Russian, Polish, Dutch, Spanish, Portuguese, Scandinavian languages, Chinese and Japanese.

WHY TEACH LANGUAGES?

Our imperialistic adventures in our war with Spain and our conquest of the Philippines and Porto Rico more than forty years ago, together with Theodore Roosevelt's dollar diplomacy, turned attention southward. With the hope of building trade and export there was a great stimulus to the teaching of Spanish in high schools. Later that died down, except as our hope of exploiting Mexican resources kept it alive in the Southwest, with the consequent result reported above.

It was from such motives that modern languages were originally added to the curriculum in the nineteenth century. "Modern languages . . . were added to the curriculum . . . in the nineteenth century . . . to satisfy the requirements of a growing volume of foreign correspondence and an ever-increasing demand for technical experts," Hogben writes in "Retreat From Reason". But "a very few superior or linguistically apt persons will persist long enough to develop a mastery sufficient to apply the skills to practical interests," Tharp tells us in The Educational Record, October, 1938.

"What is the use of learning a language to a point below that of mastery?" asks James Mursell. "No one can be said to have a mastery of any language unless he can read, write, or speak it, and not much of a mastery unless he can compass all three. . . . How many pupils achieve any such freedom with French, German, or Spanish? Very few!"

The subject of language as a whole has hardly yet entered into our curriculum. And still there are few things more interesting than words, every one of which has a history and reflects the history of a people who have originated it, modified it, and used it. All this is denied to our students in schools. As to how language, speech and writing arose and the "development of socially binding ideas through the medium of speech and writing . . . the new generation . . . has hardly a shred of an idea," writes H. G. Wells in "The Poison Called History", Survey Graphic, June, 1938.

HISTORY "AS SHE IS TAUGHT"

Mark Twain, half a century ago, won wide audience with his essay on "English As She Is Spoke". The collection of howlers of distorted English which he had picked up in Europe were very funny to us who were familiar with the idioms so curiously mangled. Howlers are always popular. Paraded in the newspapers at examination time, before commencement, they give a feeling of satisfaction and magnify the ego of those who 'know better'.

NEW YORK TIMES CRUSADE

The New York Times, understanding the psychology, has made a good thing of this. In the issue of June 21, 1942, they reported on the results of a questionnaire to 1225 colleges, of which 690 answered. 82 per cent of these colleges, it appeared, did not require the study of American history for graduation, and 72 per cent did not demand it as an entrance requirement. This aroused wide editorial comment, which was blown up almost to a scandal at the neglect, and the feeble academic protest in defense.

In the spring of 1943 the Times revived their campaign on the teaching of American history, and in the issue of April 4, presented the results of a "comprehensive question-and-answer test" prepared by H. R. Fraser of the U. S. Office of Education and Allan Nevins of Columbia, "given to 7000 freshmen students in 36 colleges, representing every section of the country . . . revealing the weaknesses of history instruction in the elementary and high schools". The report, written by Benjamin Fine, the education editor of the Times, aroused "even more commotion in education circles than did the earlier report". (School and Society, April 10, 1943)

The series of follow-up articles in the Times repeated innumerable ridiculous howlers. These were widely copied in the press throughout the country and stirred up much indignation on the part of the oldsters that the present generation should be so ignorant of our country's heroes.

QUIZ PROGRAMS

The Times questionnaire was quite in line with the popular quiz programs, which are so planned as to provide a kind of 'ego pleasure' for the participant. In the usual quiz the simple questions are so framed that it is almost inevitable that an answer will come that will bring congratulation even to the moron who in school had been denied that satisfaction and made the butt as guilty of the howlers.

This phase of our culture seems worthy of comment on the part of an anthropologist, Margaret Mead, in an article "Customs and Mores", American Journal of Sociology, May, 1942. She explains quiz programs as the "logical extension of the American emphasis upon empiricism, upon facts and figures, upon knowledge rather than understanding. . . . No higher rank goes to the man who has read Shakespeare than to the man who has read Edgar A. Guest, if the problem is to quote a line from one or the other. The 'quizz-bits' pattern, by atomizing all knowledge, makes all knowledge appear accessible to everyone—each man can exult that he got twenty answers right, and lost all sense of qualitative inferiority in temporary quantitative victory."

COLLEGE HUMOR

Undergraduates, however, who were being accused of this deficient historical knowledge were for the most part inclined to take the crusade with a laugh. The Harvard Crimson, reacting to the results of the questionnaire, poked fun. As summarized in the Harvard Alumni Bulletin, April 24, 1943,—“‘The ebullient Crimson took a hitch in its editorial trousers and challenged another journalistic giant—the New York Times.’ The Crimson was not alone in its condemnation of the survey, for leading authorities on the Faculty joined the ranks of critics and branded the poll as ‘poppycock’ and ‘irresponsible’.

“Calling the survey ‘one of the biggest hoaxes in American history and a farce’, the Crimson analyzed the undergraduate mind and came up with the startling conclusion that ‘the results might be blamed on the students who took the test and answered facetiously, but it seems logical to accuse the Times itself for distributing such a poll and taking the results so seriously.’ According to the Times, 25 per cent of the students did not know who was president during the Civil War. But, the Crimson said, ‘when 150 Southerners claim the honor for Jeff Davis they’re kidding, not misinformed’.

“Summing up its conclusions, the Crimeditors conclude that ‘about the only concrete conclusion that can be drawn from the survey is that the country’s class of 1946 has a mass sense of humor that the state of the world has been able to keep within reasonable bounds, but has not been able to kill’. The Crimson’s final words are conclusive and to-the-point: ‘The Literary Digest poll can move over’.”

INTEREST IN HOW IT’S TAUGHT

The growing furore culminated in a demand for a Congressional inquiry, “when Senator Joseph F. Guffey (D) of Pennsylvania rose up and asked an investigation of history teaching, declaring that Congress cannot legislate wisely for a people so ignorant of its own history". Guffey's resolution instructs the Senate Committee on Education and Labor to "study ways and means by which the Federal Government may most effectively promote a more thorough study of the history of the United States". (Christian Science Monitor, April 7, 1943)

The campaign had been carefully planned, the ablest men possible enlisted, the follow-up cleverly managed, and popular interest aroused, which brought considerable embarrassment to college presidents and professors of history, thereby reduced to a proper state of humility.

Why should such a campaign be attempted? What was its purpose? History as a school subject is relatively new to the curriculum and has been used to promote the growth of nationalistic feeling, which in turn gives opportunity for groups who control through skill in manipulation of ballots or otherwise to exert their power. It offers pressure groups and plutocrats opportunity to early change the slant of future lives. Hendrik Willem Van Loon declared: "Every nation in Europe has taught its national history from its own particular little angle, and I do not think we can ever expect conditions within the historical field to be entirely different".

DISTORTING 'SOCIAL STUDIES'

In "The Historian's Part in a Changing World", American Historical Review, Jan., 1937, Professor C. H. McIlwain of Harvard challenged his professional fellows, "Probably never . . . have men and women of our profession been asking themselves as earnestly and as anxiously as they are asking now, the old question, so often asked before, whether we as historians, have anything practical to offer to our own country and to the world in times of crisis like the present."

There has arisen a school of teachers of history who believe that history has something practical to offer and have attempted to make it of present value. These the editors of the New Republic had in mind in their issue of April 26, 1943, in attributing motives to this drive for American history. "The Times survey . . . from the nature of the questionnaire and the predilections of its sponsors, seems primarily designed to discredit the so-called 'social-studies extremists', and to plump for a return to a detailed chronological method of teaching American history. . . . There are more basic issues involved, including the very nature and status of education and the role and value of historical studies in the curriculum. The appeal to history, the overintent gazing upon the national navel, is filled with dangers, as every student of hyper-nationalistic culture knows."

THE ANIMUS OF THE ATTACK

Hugh Russell Fraser, co-author of the plan, reveals its purpose in an extended article, "Neglect of American History", in Education, March, 1943. The neglect, "an astonishing one", was brought to the attention of the nation by the Times, June 21, 1942. "On May 3, however, Dr. Allan Nevins, professor of American history at Columbia . . . had charged that the treatment of the subject in secondary schools was . . . casual . . . meriting the most careful and exhaustive investigation."

Numerous extracts from laudatory editorials in the great metropolitan dailies are quoted. "Soon after the Times survey, the Committee on American History, composed of representatives of various national organizations [not named], was organized in Washington to investigate the status of American history in the secondary schools.

"To that end, the Social Studies trend in certain so-called 'experimental' or 'laboratory' schools was examined." The examination as detailed was largely ridicule of the modern method of teaching social history. In this it follows long established historic precedents. (Cf. Farrington and Burnham, p. 100)

"Professor Samuel McKee, for sixteen years a member of the Columbia University department of history", is quoted,— "The emergence of the Social Studies is in large part responsible. . . . Teachers colleges are responsible for this unwholesome development." His remedy is "a good American history course of at least one-year's duration" instead of the extended work given through the grades.

Mr. Fraser cites that in 1936 on a history quiz 74 out of 400 students, who evidently read the propaganda of the Administration, in response to the question "Who is Herbert Hoover?" — "replied blithely he was 'Head of the G Men!'" A wise fifteen year old girl asked to identify Theodore Roosevelt, "finally guessed he was head of the DAR!"

The past is to be venerated. Ridicule is thrown upon the attitude that the past should be studied to illuminate the present. The final authorities quoted as to the ideals in teaching history are Lt. Gen. Ben Lear, the 'yoo-hoo' commander, who found his recruits so ignorant of American history "that he set up classes to teach them", and Admiral Nimitz, who said, "The zeal to defend our heritage is based, in the last analysis, on an understanding of its origin and development".

WARNINGS AND SUSPICIONS

For some years President Conant of Harvard had been agitating for more American history. The propaganda of the Times supplemented and carried this further. In view of the warnings that have been frequently reiterated by responsible educators, this urging of the teaching of our history, without too much regard as to how it shall be taught, has been looked upon by some with suspicion.

President Angell of Yale at the Harvard Tercentenary in 1936 declared, "In many schools American history may now be taught only in terms which self-appointed patriots deem desirable". On the same occasion Professor Robert Ulich of Harvard reflected the suspicion and fear that the teaching of history may be used to sustain present prestige and privilege. He put it succinctly:

"History is a danger if it helps to retain customs and opinions which are not relevant to the demands of living society" and "if it supports groups which have a great interest in traditions than in constructive and forward-looking ideas of their time".

History should throw light on "our present quandaries" was the view maintained by James Harvey Robinson. "The present has hitherto been the willing victim of the past; the time has now come when it should turn on the past and exploit it in the interest of advance."

"The ominous emerging tendency, under the stress of our times, for certain university administrators, fearful of the controversial possibilities in the social sciences, to play them down in favor of the humanities . . . should be stoutly resisted, even by the humanities." (Robert S. Lynd, "Knowledge for What?")

A much fuller discussion of the dangers in history teaching will be found in the 23d edition of this Handbook "Distorting History" p. 109 ff, in the 26th edition "What About Our History", p. 197 ff, and in "War and Education", p. 443 ff, the latter also by Porter Sargent published in May, 1943.

HISTORY 'PROPERLY' TAUGHT

"The Interpretation of History" (Princeton University Press, 1943) is a collection of essays by Jacques Barzun and others. Sidney Hook in reviewing the volume in the New Republic, May 3, 1943, remarks, "It is significant that few professional historians—and none of the contributors to this volume—lend their support to this apotheosis of historical study . . . the New York Times . . . movement to make the study of American history compulsory in all institutions of higher learning. . . . They realize how deceptive is the hope that the study of history guarantees support to the ideals we believe valid today. . . .

"It is always rejoined to objections of this sort that, of course, history must be 'properly' taught. But what is history 'properly' taught? If it is taught as all of the contributors to this symposium would have it taught, it is not likely to appear proper to those publicists and editorial writers who want to make its study compulsory. . . .

"Without the scientific attitude, history becomes a kind of national religion. As a national religion not everyone can be trusted to teach it, only those can qualify who have the proper faith."

MYTHS IN AMERICAN HISTORY

American history might be taught in a way to lead to an awakened awareness and desire to improve our way of life, or it may lead to stupid stultification. One need not go all the way with Philip Wylie, who writes, with the fire and zeal of an old time Presbyterian dominie, to the text of Christ's words, "O Generation of Vipers" (Farrar and Rinehart, 1942):

"American history of the school brand is a disgrace to the human cerebrum. It is taught as if America, an infallible nation, rose through heroism from dire persecution, with a shining escutcheon. This is not the stuff to give drips, because it compounds drippery. In the first place, its inhuman excess of virtue makes it unreal and thus very dull. In the second, it in no way educates. . . . Our history is every human history: a black and gory business, with more scoundrels than wise men at the lead, and more louts than both put together to cheer and follow. . . . The teaching of history . . . is a shoddy performance and all educators now alive should, in fairness, be given the noose and faggot for it."

American history as taught in the school has dealt with many myths,—the menace of the savage Indian, the Indian atrocities, the various massacres, the outrageous courage of Hannah Dustin, Braddock's defeat and the stupidity of the British red-coats. The illustrations in school histories magnified the horror of the "aboriginal menace". The courage and fortitude of the pioneers in the face of the grim unceasing toil, interpreted against the background of twentieth century ease of life is another of our historical misconceptions. Turner brought another concept, of adventure and romance to the frontier. All this above the mythical heroes, who now have been pretty completely debunked. (Wilfred W. Black, Iowa State University, "The Tradition of Pioneer Hardships in American History Text-books", Social Studies, Feb., 1943)

"The crazy combative patriotism that plainly threatens to destroy civilization today is very largely begotten by the schoolmaster and the schoolmistress in their history lessons. . . . I think we underrate the formative effect of this perpetual reiteration of how we won, how our empire grew and how relatively splendid we have been in every department of life. We are blinded by habit and custom to the way it infects these growing minds." (H. G. Wells, The Educational Record, April, 1938).

MAKING TEACHERS TIMID

Presidents and trustees of our universities and colleges have a nervous job. It devolves upon them to insure that the flow of funds from legislative acts or from the great financial centers is not interrupted. Now, the teaching of history can be carried on in such a way as to cast doubt on the integrity of those who control in public affairs. That must be prevented in order that the institution may continue to prosper. Consequently teachers of history and other social studies must be selected with care, conditioned and kept in a proper state of subservient timidity. There are independent minded men with sources of income from their own publications who are able to maintain their own individual liberal attitudes. But for the most part academic teachers of social subjects are necessarily tamed stooges.

Numerous examples could be pointed out of men who formerly followed the critical scientific method in history in which they had been trained in German universities, but who now in order to hold their position have changed their style. Some of them would be embarrassed at being faced with what they had previously written, and some may perhaps be ashamed later when confronted with what they are now writing.

In "The Challenge to Our Colleges", New York Times Magazine, William Allan Neilson, who should well know, looking at the situation from both sides as he now does, recently wrote: "It is not difficult to understand the hesitancy of conscientious historians to relate the events they chronicle with the alluring but dangerous controversies of the hour. But the carrying of this attitude to an extreme deadens the story of the past by depriving it of living interest in the present, and, on the other hand, deprives the present of the possibility of illumination from the past. . . . Economics and government lead even more directly into the field of contemporary controversy, and the timid teacher is tempted to keep out of trouble."

THE ACADEMIC INFLUENCE

Allan Nevins, who was once one of our keenest and boldest analytical historians, now enlisted with the forces that are carrying on, and who is in demand both in England and this country, has just published "America: The Story of a Free People" (Little, Brown, 1942) in conjunction with Henry Steele Commager. Something of the grace and keenness of Nevins' writing still stands out in the early part of the story.

"The Growth of the American Republic", third edition, two volumes (Oxford, 1942), though it still remains the best book on the subject, shows some departure from the attitude of the first edition. The first portion, rewritten, lacks the brilliance and forthrightness of the earlier writing of Samuel Eliot Morison, which still stands out in spots through the middle portions of this work. The influence of the joint author, Commager, in flattening out the narrative in consonance with the spirit of the times is all too apparent. In the chapter "The American Colonial Empire", the brilliant satirical writing of Morison, on our Philippine adventure, is still in evidence.

'MANIFEST DESTINY'

"McKinley, in 1897, had rejected a proposal to buy Cuba because he did not care to buy an insurrection; the United States now found that it had purchased, for twenty million dollars, a first class Filipino insurrection. For the Filipinos, who had been good Catholics for over three centuries, did not wish to be uplifted and Christianized by the Americans; but when on 4 February 1899 Aguinaldo's troops disregarded the command of an American sentry to halt, the United States army undertook to 'civilize them with a Krag'. Before the Philippine insurrection was stamped out it had cost the United States almost as many lives as the Spanish War, and more scandals; for a war between white soldiers and semi-civilized men of color is something worse than what Sherman said it was. Within a short time the United States found itself doing in the Philippines precisely what it had condemned Spain for doing in Cuba. Soon stories of reconcentration camps and 'water-cures' began to trickle back to the United States, and public opinion, already highly sceptical of a venture dubious alike in origin, method, and purpose, became inflamed."

The anti-imperialists of the time had "pointed out that the conquest, defense, and administration of the Philippines would cost us far more than the Islands would ever bring; and the prediction proved to be correct. It was alleged that the flouting of the principles of democracy in the Philippines would impair the vitality and integrity of democracy at home; and the prophecy was not unjustified."

"HISTORY AS IT SHOULD BE"

"History as it Should Be", by George Genzmer in Common Sense, May, 1943, reviews two recent books of different types of historical writing free from the baleful academic influence. Each achieves the ultimate purpose as nearly as possible of putting the reader on the spot where the event occurred, with full understanding of what led the actors in the drama to play their parts as they did.

Bernard DeVoto's "The Year of Decision: 1846" (Little, Brown, 1943) has a thesis that events of the year 1846 made the Civil War inevitable, but he writes realistically from a comprehensive grasp of the contemporary documents, without regard to accepted myths, this "story of some people who went west in 1846". His is a life interest in the people and the country that he deals with, not a subject worked up for a Ph.D. or a college course. His own personal experience enters into his unrepressed personal judgments. In his preface he makes obeisance to professional historians, knowing that this is not their way and warning them of their possible "shock and horror".

In Carl Van Doren's "Mutiny in January" (Viking, 1943), with full use of the sources and the technique of the disciplined historian, we are given a simple narrative of the events of one month in a portion of the Continental Army in New Jersey.

"THE WORLD HISTORIANS"

"There is no doubt that world history is being made today on a grandiose scale", writes Karl Korsch in "The World Historians", Partisan Review, Sept.-Oct., 1942. "We must go back into the preceding centuries of European and American thought" if we are to understand how, "like any isolated tribe in some remote or inaccessible corner of the earth", European historians "mistook their own habitat for the whole world".

The Western "world historians of this period" derive from "a series of clerical historians from Augustine in the 4th to Bossuet in the 17th century". The rise of the middle classes and the coming of the Reformation brought about the generally accepted but "arbitrary distinction between a 'medieval' and a 'modern' type of universal history". Voltaire wrote to debunk Bossuet, just as Gibbon wrote to show "continuous retrogression" during the rule of Christianity.

"The early historians of Catholicism and of the various Gnostic systems of the East" had dealt with world history, as Spengler put it, as "a unique and supremely dramatic act, having as its theatre the lands between Hellas and Persia and as its subject matter a catastrophe, an epochal change of phase between world-creation and world-decay". That too had been the theme of Herodotus and Polybius.

SYNTHETIC HISTORIES

After the "abortive revolution of 1848 . . . a critical phase for universal history began". Philosophy of history and every form of universal or general history fell into contempt. Historians turned to "highly specialized research". This is illustrated in the work of Mommsen, which falls into two periods. His later works are aptly described by A. J. Toynbee as "so many volumes of a learned periodical which happens to have had only one contributor". The "same spirit of the times", Korsch tells us,

"transformed Lord Acton from the prospective author of a (never completed) 'History of Liberty' into the founder of that cooperative enterprise of minute specialism that became 'The Cambridge Modern History' . . . carrying over . . . the economic techniques of the modern 'factory system' to the field of historical research (Shotwell)".

"Since the days of Mommsen and Ranke", says Toynbee, "historians have given their best energies to the 'assemblage' of raw materials—inscriptions, documents, and the like—in 'corpus'es and periodicals, and, when they have attempted to 'work' these materials 'up' into 'manufactured' or 'semi-manufactured' articles, they have had recourse, once again, to the Division of Labour and have produced synthetic histories."

EGOCENTRIC UNIVERSALISM

"The picture is not improved", Korsch declares, "by the institutionalization to which the scientific production of the American scholars has been recently subjected through the increasing control and direction of their formerly 'free' activities by the powerful scientific Foundations. Here as in other fields the mockery of a 'planned' production that is superimposed on the market by the increasing influence of monopoly capitalism has only disturbed the automatic self-corrections, such as they were, that existed in an earlier phase, without replacing them by effective planning. . . .

"The next phase of universal history which began near the end of the third quarter of the 19th century and lasted until the first world war, 1914-18, can be described . . . as the age of monopoly-capitalism and imperialism. . . . It survives today only in the state-controlled ideologies of Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia. Witness the oft repeated references to the 'leading bankers and plutocrats' in Stalin's May Day Order."

Up to Spengler and Toynbee "all previous philosophers and historians . . . had mistaken their own civilization for the only existing Civilization (in the singular and with a capital C) that needed to be taken care of in a truly 'universal' history. The stubbornness with which this barrier of Western historical thought persists to the present day is well illustrated by the tremendous contradiction between the purported and the real scope of recent history books. . . .

"This strange pre-Copernican view which regards its own restricted sphere as the center if not as the whole extent of the 'world' has prevailed during the last two hundred years among the most 'cosmopolitan' liberals as well as among the most 'international' socialists.

LEARNING ABOUT OUR EARTH

"Why Not Teach Geography?" asks Dan Stiles, lyceum lecturer, in Harper's, May, 1943. In lecturing to schools and colleges he discovered that we are turning out large crops of geographical illiterates. It has long been regarded as an elementary school subject, beneath the dignity of high schools.

GEOGRAPHIC ILLITERACY

The fact is geography is a new science. Following the lead of theologians, educators and statesmen whom they trained, too long ignored the earth on which we live. Their gaze was in another direction. Geography was long taught as a "description of the earth's surface". "As the home of man" was added during the nineteenth century. In grammar school as a boy I recited, "Geography is the study of the earth's surface as the dwelling place of man", but in Sunday School I sang. "Heaven is my home". With that, interest in the earth was not enhanced.

The war has convinced Americans of their "geographic illiteracy", Professor Howard Wilson of the Harvard Graduate School of Education told the National Council of Geography Teachers, emphasizing that German successes are largely due to their superior understanding of geography. Commissioner Studebaker told the National Conference of College and University Presidents in January, 1942, "We have never taught geography. Young people have stopped studying geography beyond the 7th and 8th grades of the schools, and they have been taught by people who stopped studying geography at about the same time." (Geographic School Bulletin, Feb. 2, 1942)

Americans are ignorant of "the fact of American regionalism . . . that their country has been divided by nature into a number of distinct areas each of which is highly developed, because of its geography, in a specialized and particular way, with problems and needs and aspirations which conflict with those of other areas", Stiles points out. Our artificial and meaningless state lines follow meridians and parallels laid out often before the country had been explored, much less surveyed.

GROWING INTEREST IN REGIONS

The study of "the local region" was advocated and introduced into the Quincy schools by Colonel Parker in the early eighties, and has been sporadically continued in our schools, as has been noted in previous editions of this Handbook. As Trevor Lloyd remarks, it "converts the student's existing knowledge of his home area into the 'geographical language' which he needs to understand what has been written of other places". Regionalism as it has developed of late is a scientific study of the relations of the inhabitants to the spatial areas in which they live and their natural resources in the interest of human well being. (Cf. pp. 64-5)

The impetus to these studies came from Howard W. Odum's "American Regionalism. A Cultural-Historical Approach to National Integration" (Holt, 1938). Interest among sociologists in regionalism has so increased that Social Forces devotes four of its quarterly issues in 1942 and 1943 to technical treatment by sociologists of special phases of this subject of growing interest. Moreover journals of geography and sociology are replete with articles on regionalism.

"A Regional Program for the Social Studies", by Professor August C. Krey of the University of Minnesota, offers a method of "teaching the close contact between our local provincial lives and communities the world around" (Cf. Social Studies, Feb., 1943). Prof. Bernard E. Meland of Pomona College writes, "No one person can attain significance apart from relations with people and events which give meaning to his existence. . . . The social reality most indispensable to man is the community. One may think in large social terms about the nation and a world society; but the living, physical person stands rooted in some regional group life." (Journal of Higher Education, Feb., 1943)

POLITICAL IMPLICATIONS

"The Place of Geography in the Social Studies for Orientation in a World of Changing National Boundaries" is dealt with by Professor Derwent Whittlesey of Harvard in the Journal of Geography, Jan., 1943. "Alterations on the political map . . . only emphasize . . . the earth as the sole stable element in human society . . . not expressed by boundaries, but by . . . the geographic regions" each of which "continues to carry on its own economic, social, and political life, and its individual history. . . . The geographer views the earth as a mosaic.

"The region is the surest element of stability in a program of 'social studies'. . . . It is the business of geographers to view human society against a background of the only stable foundation it has, the earth." Then he explains why Alsace, a geographic region, is "a representative . . . of boundary change". Whittlesey in the Harvard Educational Review, Oct., 1941, charged, "The neglect of geography by American secondary schools and colleges robs the American public today of information needed to comprehend both the strategy of conflict and the geographic causes of world controversy".

In "Geographical Regionalism of World Problems", Alfred H. Meyer of Valparaiso University (Journal of Geography, Feb., 1943) writes, "A geographer in Europe is a recognized authority of a highly respected field of learning and public service. In America the geographer is just beginning to make his influence felt in academic and public circles. That the problems of society in many cases have a definite regional base is a concept which we in America have been slow to grasp."

GEOGRAPHY IS PRACTICAL

"Geographers have, from the earliest times been very practical people. They have always been 'doers' and usually have been adventurers. Yet it is a rare geography classroom that gives even a pale reflection of this pioneering spirit. . . The academic approach to learning—the way of the book, the eye and the ear—is an inheritance from the days of Monastery schools. They were intended to produce clerks, clergymen and book-keepers. The old bookish ways were doubtless suitable for the things needing to be learned in schools," writes Trevor Lloyd of Dartmouth in "Practical Geography in the High School", Journal of Geography, Feb., 1943.

Geography, like other sciences, "is best approached by means of things that can be done. . . Much of the actual work must and should be done out of doors, or to use the modern term 'on location', but there is a great deal which can be carried on in the laboratory or workroom by the students. . .

"The best geographers have always been doers, travellers and explorers. Practical work removes the subject from among the book studies which are so unpopular in schools. . . We on this continent have been far behind our colleagues in Great Britain in asking for and securing properly equipped Geography Rooms. Our own organization might consider the value of urging the need for such rooms on the various educational authorities. Once a special room has been secured, the desks torn out of it, its neat and scoured appearance marred by maps, diagrams, charts and apparatus few need to be convinced that what goes on in there is worth doing."

MAPS ARE WEAPONS

The war has stimulated interest in geography. It has made us aware of the importance of maps in strategy military and political and of the use of maps as weapons in propaganda. Our high school and college trained men are, however, so ignorant of map reading that the Army has been obliged to institute courses in it. Meantime the public is getting some education through newspapers and such magazines as Time not only in reading maps but in interpreting them.

Maps naturally tend to be inaccurate, for "Map Makers Are Human", as John K. Wright fully explains and illustrates in the Geographic Review, Oct., 1942. Maps can be made to swell breasts with pride, like the British all red map on Mercator's projection, exaggerating the size of Canada.

"The map, the most distinctive tool of geography, has become an important propagandic weapon in psychological warfare. Maps on postage stamps have been used to air grievances and to express pride. On occasion they have led to political turmoil. As a retort to the British Falkland Island centennial stamp of 1933, Argentina issued a stamp showing the islands as an Argentinian possession," remarks Louis O. Quam of the University of Colorado in "The Use of Maps in Propaganda", Journal of Geography, Jan., 1943.

"Maps Are Weapons", according to H. W. Weigert, and have brought a new dimension, a space consciousness to propaganda (Survey Graphic, Oct., 1941). And he illustrates this largely from German propaganda maps. From the Germans, who for centuries have been the greatest of map makers, we have learned during the war of how to use maps in getting propaganda ideas across to the people.

In L'Illustration there was published in 1940 a picture of Sumner Welles with Paul Reynaud in the latter's office and in the background a French propaganda map of Central Europe showing how it should be divided after the war. It created an international incident.

THE NATURE OF GEOGRAPHICAL IDEAS

A professor of geography at Teachers College, George T. Renner, dilates on "The Nature of Geographical Ideas" in an interesting and novel way in Teachers College Record, May, 1942. There are nine basic geographical concepts, of which most Americans are ignorant,—the world as a whole, the distinction between place, position, situation, space relation, geographic adjustment, region, and place continuity.

Most Americans still "believe firmly that there is an Eastern and a Western Hemisphere". No such things exist. There is no East or West except in the human mind. "There is no division of the earth into hemispheres. . . . Yet our federal laws actually give legal status to a two-hemisphere world", and we are fighting a war based in part on this false conception.

Few people in Boston realize that they are moving round the earth's axis 700 miles an hour and about the sun 80,000 miles during the same hour. Only a few astronomers know that during that same hour we have drifted at a more rapid rate hundreds of thousands of miles through the galaxy we call the Milky Way, while all that we conceive as the Milky Way itself has another motion, its rate and direction still to be discovered. All these motions arouse no emotion within us.

TEA TABLE WAR AT THE PEACE TABLE

More recently Renner's article in Collier's, June 6, 1942, "Maps for a New World", showed Europe divided into nine large regions without regard to the political lines established at the Treaty of Westphalia and later. Renner's idea is that while political divisions exist they should be sufficiently large to supply the inhabitants with a fair share of the world's resources.

The publication of this map gave us "a preview of what the peace table may be like", Time remarked, July 13, 1942. "Renner undertook to translate the Atlantic Charter and other 'noble statements' by amateurs (i. e., statesmen and political thinkers) into a map. Amateurs were astounded at the result." "Columnist Dorothy Thompson" and "Pundit Walter Lippmann" charged violently, each breaking a lance.

Renner, "calling Lippmann an amateur with little geography . . . explained that his maps were primarily based on human factors—on culture, language and the desire for national security. Said he: 'To one who has not studied geographical theory and principles (as most Americans have not) most lines on a map may look roughly alike. A geographer, however, knows that to shift a line a few miles or to change its course minutely may mean the difference between a fair and an unfair peace, between peace and future war.' Many U. S. scholars agreed with him that they [his maps] had at least brought discussion of the post-war world down to earth."

THE SCIENCE OF EARTH AND MAN

With the surface of the earth to explore, to conquer, the maritime nations of Europe were engaged in empire building, not earth study. It was the confined peoples of Central Europe who in the nineteenth century rapidly developed geography as a science. The great names are Von Humboldt, Von Richthofen, Ritter, Ratzel.

Brooks Adams about 1900, studying "Civilization and Decay", foresaw that the great centralizing forces at work would result in the power of the world being centered in the greatest continental stretch, in Eurasia.

About the same time the great English geographer Sir Halford Mackinder enlarged upon the influence of geography on government and history in an article in 1904, "The Geographical Pivot of History", which went all unnoticed, as did his "Democratic Ideals and Reality" (Holt, 1919, reissued 1942), written to warn his countrymen at the Versailles Conference.

"German scholars . . . were the only ones to take an interest in even the comparatively unsuccessful efforts in this direction made by Brooks Adams in the U. S. They studied the magnificent work of the British geographer Mackinder, which has been completely overlooked for more than twenty years by the English-speaking people," Karl Korsch points out in "A Historical View of Geopolitics", New Essays, Spring, 1943.

It was the Swedish historian Kjellen who about 1900 introduced the term geopolitics, which had no vogue, however, until after the first World War General Haushofer, largely inspired by the ideas of Mackinder, but also as a result of extensive travel and research, developed his Institut für Geopolitik at Munich. Mackinder's writings warning the British Empire naturally had a British bias. Haushofer's theories, with their German bias, were taken up and made German propaganda. But both had a solid geographic core in pointing out that with the passing of sea power the control of the great continental land regions would bring dominance.

GERMAN GEOPOLITICS

"Geopolitik Doctrine of National Self-Sufficiency and Empire" (Johns Hopkins Press, 1942) by Johannes Mattern, assistant librarian and lecturer in political science at Johns Hopkins, summarizes the popular literature on Geopolitik and Lebensraum and traces the principles back to "Roman imperial expansion". Three chapters are given over to the ideas and teachings of Rudolf Kjellen, the famous Swedish political scientist. The volume is valuable as presenting much material without any reference to Haushofer and the Institute.

Carl Schmitt's "Voelkerrechtliche Grossraumordnung" (3d ed., 1941) is an epitome of geopolitical thoughtways, speculations, and doctrines. It regards geopolitics as an attempt to orient people toward their geographical and ecological environment, with consideration of the effects of recent technological developments. It considers the domain of a numerically, culturally, and historically preponderant and ethnologically related people in the midst of numerically smaller, culturally backward, and historically less important peoples in the same region. Rigid geographical boundaries are no longer inviolable but must expand or disappear with the closer inter-communication and economic exchange of neighboring peoples. The sovereignty of regions will prevail over the old national sovereignty. In a regionally organized whole "there are only living communities which may or may not differ from each other".

AMERICA LEARNS ABOUT IT

Geopolitics was an unknown term to Americans until in the summer of 1941 a sensational article by Frederic Sondern, Jr., was reprinted in the Reader's Digest from the June Current History, on the "Thousand Scientists Behind Hitler".

However, for our military specialists, "geopolitics had no novelty and no mystery", Korsch tells us. "They had known and practiced it themselves" long before Pearl Harbor, after which it became imperative to belittle it as propaganda. "We find . . . Colonel Beukema referring to German Geopolitik at one time as an undoubtedly scientific work 'which must not be confused with propaganda' (Fortune, Jan., '42), at another time as 'a curious medley of unscientific jargon, irrefutable facts, and plain hokum'. (Introduction to Dorpalen, p. XVI)."

The first popular presentation of geopolitics to the American people appeared in the Atlantic, March, 1941, by Yale's Far Eastern expert, A. Whitney Griswold, and dealt largely with the Pacific situation. The following November the late Robert Strausz-Hupé gave a straightforward presentation of geopolitics in Fortune, as did H. W. Weigert the same month in Harper's.

These articles made it clear that the Germans in their knowledge of geography, were vastly superior to us and were making excellent use of it not only in warfare but in their propaganda. Having so long neglected the scientific study of geography and its human relations, this brought about the to be expected frustration and aggressive reaction in counter propaganda. Since then, public opinion has been so inflamed over the iniquity of geopolitics that it has been almost impossible for anyone to write rationally and calmly about it. Many of the scientists engaged will be somewhat embarrassed if they live to read their writing at a later period when the necessity for vilifying the enemy has passed.

Of the scores of magazine articles, two in the October, 1942, issue of the Geographical Review stand out. The first, by George Kiss, "Political Geography Into Geopolitics: Recent Trends in Germany", presents the German view of its development against the historic background of the Thirty Years War and Napoleon's devastations. "After a long period of complete political dejection and subservience, following the Treaty of Westphalia in 1648, the voice of Kant rose from the wind-swept shores of the Baltic, admonishing his countrymen to pool their efforts, instead of wasting their energies in the thousand petty principalities of Rococo Germany." He traces the development of this thought toward German unity and expansion.

COUNTER PROPAGANDA

Isaiah Bowman follows this with an article on "Geography vs. Geopolitics", written as counter propaganda, not strictly in the scientific mood. "Geopolitics is . . . an apology for theft", not based on "scientifically 'demonstrated' laws. There are only two 'laws' that will guarantee permanent peace in a world in which the choice lies between freedom and slavery: justice based on the doctrine of human rights, and the cooperative exercise of power to enforce justice "

1942 brought a crop of substantial books on geopolitics, with reprints of Mackinder's basic treatises. "Geopolitics. The Struggle for Space and Power" (Putnam, 1942) by the late Strausz-Hupé, who knew his subject at first hand, enlarged upon his earlier article in Fortune and was a fair unemotional presentation. "Generals and Geographers: The Twilight of Geopolitics" (Oxford, 1942), by Hans W. Weigert, showed the influence of the temper of the times since the writing of his earlier article. But he, too, has first hand knowledge.

"The World of General Haushofer: Geopolitics in Action" (Farrar & Rinehart, 1942), by Andreas Dorpalen, with extended introduction by Col. Herman Beukema, U. S. A., is especially valuable for its quotations from otherwise untranslated German sources. "German Strategy of World Conquest" (Farrar & Rinehart, 1942), by Derwent Whittlesey, with the collaboration of members of the National Planning Association, presents the subject as a main stream of German thought and a carefully designed scheme of world conquest. "America's Strategy in World Politics" by Nicholas John Spykman of Yale sought to build a Geopolitik for the United States, but does not mention Geopolitics or Haushofer.

The furore over geopolitics has given rise to geo-economics, metapolitics, psychopolitics. All of these somewhat distorted wartime efforts have the lasting and beneficial effect of bringing the attention of men down to earth, to consider more fully the influences of geographical and environmental factors on man's behavior. These are subjects that cannot be neglected in the future by educators. They certainly will not be by statesmen, generals, dictators.

INTERCULTURAL EDUCATION

When military conquests and diplomats' boundary lines are of less importance in the minds of people, when the natural regions of the earth with the cultures that developed in them are recognized and respected, we may have something throughout the world as well worth while as the democratic dream of a free pioneering people. We may find new frontiers to continue to advance, and that the resources of the earth are ample for those who are prepared to enjoy them.

The rise of the conceptions of regionalism, of functionalism, hold great promise, but there is danger also that they may become, like so many other things, slogans, symbols, verbalizations, not realizations. Here is an opportunity for the teachers of geography to develop an intercultural education.

WHAT WE DON'T TEACH ABOUT GOVERNMENT

We Americans are proud of our representative government and idealistic about democracy. However, few of us know much about how it works. Few voting citizens understand what happens in caucus or what the precinct captain does. Still fewer who have had numerous courses in the theory of sovereignty and government in our great universities know the two volume work of Ostrogorski, the Russian, who after ten years of research, wrote explaining in detail just how democracy is worked in Great Britain and America.

'CIVICS'

Government in our schools is covered now by the social studies. We used to call it 'civics', a weak apology for learning something of the Constitution. The late Paul Hanus, long emeritus professor of education at Harvard, devoted the latter years of his life to crusading for better teaching of civics and government in our schools. He held and declared that it "fails to bring home to the pupils the contrast between good government and bad".

Richard Welling has been another valiant fighter for more effective teaching of school civics. He has worked zealously to promote understanding and better teaching of government. In his autobiography, "As the Twig Is Bent" (Putnam, 1942) Welling tells of the sixty years of his eighty-year-long life, beginning with Theodore Roosevelt in New York City, fighting for better teaching of government and more self-government in the schools. His National Self Government Committee organized in 1904 now has "More than 5000 high school principals and teachers active proponents of teaching politics as the art of good government through student self-government", writes Arthur B. Moehlman, in the Nation's Schools, Feb., 1943.

William R. George was another who really believed in, not merely indulged in, idealistic talk about democracy and good government. In the late 'nineties he started the George Junior Republic, which now has branches and offshoots where "bad" boys live under a democratic town meeting form of self-administered government and have gone out from the school to hold high political offices and make their mark in other fields.

An honest, practical, realistic treatment of civics and government is difficult and dangerous to undertake. Few school superintendents or principals have the authority or the courage. But there have been some middle western schools in smaller cities where enthusiastic teachers have sent their children out to interview not merely the mayor, who is usually a front man, but the political bosses, the ward heelers, the precinct captains, the aldermen or councilmen, to ask them naively about their work and what they do. That's learning about democracy as an actuality and how it works.

HOW DEMOCRACY WORKS

E. W. Kenworthy of Indiana University gives a picture of just how the small American city is run (Survey Graphic, Dec., 1942), ignored or unknown by respectable teachers and well-to-do families. Politically it "is controlled by the money of the so-called 'Syndicate' ", which "runs the houses of prostitution, the gambling casino, horse rooms, pin ball machines, juke boxes, and even reaches its hand into the small dice games on the pool tables in the Negro sections.

"The boss . . . a soft-spoken, quietly dressed gentleman . . . is a genial host . . . highly regarded as a philanthropic citizen. He . . . has a Christmas tree for the poor kiddies" and all that. "The prosecuting attorney never prosecutes; the sheriff never raids or arrests, the mayor tells the chief of police whom he can pinch. . . . The Syndicate insures itself by seeing to it that a majority of the Common Council are also on the payroll or amenable to bribes." A majority of the "school board must also be Syndicate appointees. So efficient is the Syndicate's organization that there" is no "need for rough stuff. . . . Money makes everything smooth." Mayor, sheriff, and prosecuting attorney get "from $500 to $1000 a month. . . . The city judge is remembered." Every contract must be made to yield gravy. There is no hope of clearing the slums, for there is no money in it.

The author's and the usual attitude in the face of such a situation is to call for "a rebirth of interest in political and social democracy" and a belief that we once had such and were free from such faults. That is indulging in myths. What we need is such teaching of civics, such first hand investigation of how the town and city are run, that children will know a precinct captain from a bobolink. Few American citizens do. They are kept ignorant by our teaching.

THE ART OF RULING

The state is the abstraction by which we designate the center of authority which in recent centuries has supplanted the church. Like the church it is surrounded by a halo of divine right. Popular attitudes still remain utopian. The theory of democracy is held to be ideal, the Constitution is revered, the founding fathers are beyond reproach. Of course, due to the evil qualities of men mistakes and abuses do occur. But one shouldn't knock, one should boost.

But even in the conservative universities an occasional thinker, like Zechariah Chafee, Jr., of the Harvard Law School, in his "Free Speech", will speak out,—“A government is at bottom the officials who carry it on: legislators and prosecutors, school superintendents and police.” Carl Friedrich, professor of government at Harvard, recognizes that at times “those engaged in government are in no sense a class, but a conquering tribe or a militant religious group or just a plain gang engaged in getting what they can out of all the classes of a subjugated society” (Saturday Review, Jan. 16, 1943). Huey Long was for a time the government of Louisiana, as Louis XIV was of France.

MANIPULATION OF SYMBOLS

For those who seize or control government, the art of government is like that of the magician. The essential thing is to distract attention from the act you are actually performing, which then, unobserved, seems to have been miraculously accomplished. That's all there is to palming, producing the rabbit from the top hat. The disappearing lady or the boy who is having his head cut off on the stage, may be only the reflection in mirrors of someone off stage. What the magician does with mirrors the politician does with symbols.

Magic has played a large part in the life of man. The magicians, the shamen, what with their fetishes and hocus pocus and abracadabra, distract our attention from what they are actually doing and deceive us as to their miraculous powers. Rulers have their techniques. They enthuse or awe us with symbols or ideologies, a much more advanced art of distracting attention from what is actually being put across. The art of ruling is fooling of those whom you would control, make loyal.

The great statesmen of the past are politicians who succeeded. Caesar, ambitious but bankrupt young man, went into Gaul to get wealth and to make political capital. His Commentaries, written on the spot at the time and transmitted to Rome as news bulletins, were straight propaganda. A little later Suetonius' writing was purely political propaganda of the most vicious type, but so successful in blackening Tiberius that for nineteen hundred years he has been regarded as a devil. Tiberius, wise old ruler, had said, “A good shepherd should shear and not skin his sheep”.

GOVERNMENT AS BEHAVIOR

The conception of human behavior, the way men act and what leads them to do so, is recent. It came out of some inquisitive young men who had had some biological and psychological training, like Thorndike observing the way chickens behave, or Yerkes, who began with humbler creatures, protozoa or earthworms, and later apes. Pavlov's discovery of the conditioned reflex and the later investigations did much to put the study of behavior on a scientific basis, that is where observations could be controlled, checked, repeated under similar conditions to give similar results, and the percentage of error in the observations gradually reduced.

Government, the ruling and controlling of people, has to do with behavior, that of the rulers and the ruled. History is a presentation of how they behaved in the past. But much of it is propaganda of the time put forth to deceive the people and accepted by them. Otherwise the rulers would probably have not survived and their propaganda would have been destroyed. Civics and politics both have to do with the way city-states are run.

The study of government, which in our universities is so largely devoted to theories of 'sovereignty', 'the state', and the like, realistically considered is the study of human behavior and its control by the top men through various forms of power, moral, intellectual, economic, physical. All this was examined into and expounded in the 24th edition of this Handbook, pp. 104-130. Those who control with modern technological improvements can increasingly control the information that comes to us, our mental content, which determines our feelings as well as thoughts. This and its technique were explained in the same edition, pp. 131-194. "How Governments Perpetuate Themselves" was explained with full documentation in "War and Education" (Sargent, 1943), pp. 411-450.

SCIENCE AND GOVERNMENT

A scientific study of these types of behavior, based on observation and justified deductions, has been at various periods attempted but usually suppressed as not serving the interests of those in control. With the present set-up of our universities, little can be expected from them in this line, though bolder attempts are being made by free lances

"If we are to conduct the greatest of all businesses . . . government, with even a reasonable degree of proficiency, if we are to maintain a stable and efficient democratic, political system, it seems obvious that the effort must be increasingly animated by and permeated with the scientific spirit", writes Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution, in Science, Dec. 11, 1942.

He is considering the topic "Science and Government" and believes "the surest means of resolving the prevailing confusion of our time and of finding solutions to the baffling problems now confronting civilization lies in a reintegration of knowledge through the systematic study of the various fields of science conceived as a whole. . . . So long as we have a party system dependent for its perpetuation upon the good-will of the people, popular reaction to national policies will play a role of great importance, and popular opinion is not synonymous with scientific opinion."

Moulton believes all this is "the primary responsibility of the university" and cites the extensive courses given by universities in the subject. It is encouraging that, following "the organization in 1907 of the New York Bureau of Municipal Research", many states established "fully staffed legislative reference services". But he ignores the fact that all these agencies are indirectly or directly dependent for support on those who control the government.

ENVIRONMENT AND GOVERNMENT

The scientific view of what we call government would indicate that relations between rulers and ruled are not always the same in time or place. Environmental conditions, geographical, economic, ideological, affect the relation between the ruler and the ruled. We associate the Oriental environment with despotic tyranny, the Baltic countries with autocratic governments, the maritime peoples strangely enough with both democracy and imperialism.

But with all the varieties of political experience between the ruler and the ruled, certain fundamentals seem to hold, though the manner changes with time and place. Knowledge of this had soaked down to the fishermen in Shakespeare's "Pericles, Prince of Tyre". "Third Fisherman. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea. First Fisherman. Why as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones."

Pike are voracious fish. Live bait is most effective in catching them. If pike are well fed, and then smaller fish that they usually prey upon are put into their tank, satiated they ignore them. Eventually they become so habituated to their presence that even when deprived of food for a time they will not molest them. Then if other small fish are introduced, they will eat the newcomers and leave their little pals alone. With men it is the same. We prey upon our fellows but may become so habituated to them in the course of civilization that we ignore them. But strange men are still our enemies, to be destroyed. Only cannibals devour them.

"DEFENDERS OF FREEDOM"

The quotation from Shakespeare above is used by James Burnham in introducing his new book on "Defenders of Freedom" (John Day, 1943), which challengingly and daringly he precedes with the title "The Machiavellians". It is a bold, courageous book which smashes directly into the theories of the state and sovereignty and government as taught and upheld in our educational institutions. He turns his attention to the realistic and scientific students of government and politics.

The core of the book is about Machiavelli, who "founded the science of politics for the modern world" (John Addington Symonds). And this is followed by essays on later thinkers in their scientific examination of government, the two Italians Mosca and Pareto, the Frenchman Sorel, and the Swiss Michels. Machiavelli has long been in the doghouse. His plain spokenness was unacceptable to those who to continue in power saw the necessity of concealing their technique. Most of the other realistic students of government have been largely ignored in academic circles. Pareto, taken up by Mussolini, became academically respectable in the 'twenties through the development of a Pareto cult at Harvard and at Columbia. More recently Machiavelli, whose name for centuries was adjectively used as synonymous with diabolical, has been adequately presented by recent biographers. (Cf. Handbook, 24th ed., p. 112)

"The harsh opinion of Machiavelli has been more widespread in England and the United States than in the nations of Continental Europe. This is no doubt natural, because the distinguishing quality of Anglo-Saxon politics has always been hypocrisy, and hypocrisy must always be at pains to shy away from the truth", Burnham remarks.

The underlying theme of all those thinkers with whom Burnham deals is that the deductive or scientific method of studying the behavior of those who control leads to the conclusion that they arrived at control through a struggle for political power, and that the social process can be understood only through realization that history is such a struggle between the 'ins' and the 'outs', the elite and the non-elite, in which power and ideologies are the controlling means. These latter Burnham does not hesitate to denominate as force or fraud, for logical action plays a small part in political and social change. Those in power retain it so long as the people believe in them. But there is a constant change in the ranks as men demonstrate their usefulness to those in control or ability to supplant them. Burnham concludes, "No social structure is permanent, and no static utopia is possible".

But the leaders themselves become deceived with the very myths which they inherit or help to create, such as that all men are born free and equal. "When this happens they are no longer scientific. Sincerity is bought at the price of freedom. . . . The programs which they profess as well as those upon which they act, are devoid of reality in their failure to recognize the general pattern of our age. . . . They admit of no responsibility except to the fiction of the mass, which is only the projection of their own unloosed will to power. Proceeding in this manner . . . they have brought civilization to the most shattering crisis of recorded history." Burnham emphasizes that while force is the final appeal, control cannot be maintained without ideologies, which are myths created to impress and hold loyal the people.

THE TWENTY YEARS CRISIS

A more significant book on the science of government is Edward Hallett Carr's "The Twenty Years Crisis, 1919-1939: An Introduction to the Study of International Relations" (Macmillan, 1939). Published just before the break of war, it met with a few outstanding reviews, but has not received the notice of which it is worthy.

His later book "The Conditions of Peace" (Macmillan, 1942) met with fuller approbation, perhaps because in his conclusion he reverts to the Foreign Office view of what the peace should be. But as to the cause of our present troubles, he explains that the political sciences are still in the utopian stage. "The privileged group tends to idealise the period in which it has risen to the height of its power, and to see its highest good in the maintenance of those conditions. Secondly, the privileged group is preoccupied with the question of its own security rather than with the need for reform or even for progress."

Carr, for many years an official in the Foreign Office and later professor of international relations in the University College of Wales, is now chief editorial writer for the London Times. His opportunities to see the inside workings of political power in the greatest empire the world has known have been unusual. His thesis is that the present disaster in international affairs is due to the falsity of our former utopianism, our ideologies and that totalitarianism is not a cause but an effect, not a disease but a symptom. He is trying to tell the intelligent of the world just what Machiavelli tried to tell his prince, what Michels attempted to tell the democracies, Mosca the people, and Pareto the elite.

His title "The Twenty Years Crisis" obscured the importance of his realistic and scientific deductions on the nature of political power and government, in which he restates and emphasizes the conclusions of the great thinkers whom Burnham reviews. But he applies all this to the conduct of affairs between the two wars.

"The characteristic feature of the present crisis, seen in the light of the twenty years between 1919 and 1939, has been the abrupt descent from the visionary hopes of the first post-War decade to the grim despair of the second, from a utopia which took little account of reality to a reality from which every element of utopia seems rigorously excluded. . . . The utopia of 1919 was hollow and without substance. It was without influence on the future because it no longer had any roots in the present."

The Utopians would have states obey the same code of morality as do individuals. But there is no police power to enforce the code with the states as there is with individuals, so in the last resort it becomes a dual between the rival states and their allies as to which can exert the greater force and so determine the code of behaviour for other states thereafter.

"Realists . . . hold that relations between states are governed solely by power and that morality plays no part in them. . . . Politics are, then, in one sense always power politics. Common usage applies the term 'political' not to all activities of the state, but to issues involving a conflict of interests. Once this conflict has become resolved, the issue ceases to be 'political' and becomes a matter of administrative routine. . . .

"The ever increasing use of propaganda as a regular instrument of foreign policy has been one of the factors contributing to recent international tension. Recognition of power over opinion as a normal instrument of policy will tend to deprive it of the disturbing influence which it at present exercises. . . . The reductio ad absurdum of this international ideological propaganda as a cloak for national policy is perhaps the recent adoption of negative slogans designed to unite in a political alliance those who share no positive ideology in common. Thus 'anti-communism' has been adopted as a rallying-cry on one side and 'anti-Fascism' on the other."

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

Moralists and ideologists, those who believe in long held myths, are shocked at such a realistic treatment. If this is science, they would throw over science to retain the comfort of their old beliefs. "Are we to believe", they ask, "that all history is a lie, a conspiracy, that our heroes are mythical?" Well, a great many today would admit that there has been some such situation in Germany of late and in Japan for some thousand years or more. We see those situations at a distance with some perspective.

Just such a conspiracy in the ancient world to suppress scientific knowledge lest it interfere with those in political control is revealed in Benjamin Farrington's "Science and Politics in the Ancient World" (Allen & Unwin, 1939). He tells us, "Ancient writers . . . inform us of . . . the two sources of ancient superstition, popular ignorance and deliberate deceit", and makes it clear how the politically powerful promoted ignorance.

Another Britisher, Robert Briffault, in his "Reasons for Anger" has shown how human stupidity has been promoted in more recent time to the same end.

THE LIGHT OF GREECE SNUFFED OUT

"Greek science in sixth-century Ionia", with its heritage from Minoa and its contact with the East, had measured the earth and knew its motions. Anaximander in his book "On Nature" made all this clear and that "man, in the beginning resembled another animal, to wit, a fish". He "realized that the kind of things he was led by observation and reflection to believe about the universe constituted a new kind of knowledge not the same as that taught by poets and priests", Farrington tells us.

Over a thousand years later in the sixth century of our era, Cosmas Indicopleustes, whose "Christian Topography" "has survived while only the smallest fragments of Anaximander's [work] remain, set out to prove . . . that the earth is a flat plain with high walls" following "the model of the tabernacle of Moses. . . . The motive power for the heavenly bodies was supplied by angels . . . who produced the phenomena of night and day . . . by carrying the heavenly bodies round a high mountain that lay to the north of the plain."

"What causes had operated to produce the change?", Farrington asks and explains. "The problem of government in the class-divided societies of classical antiquity reveals its acuteness not only in the descriptions of open stasis, or class-warfare, in which the records of the ancient historians abound, but in the systematic efforts on the part of governments, priesthoods, and leaders of thought in various fields of human achievement, to provide the mass of their people not with true ideas but with 'wholesome' ones."

Plato and Aristotle used their influence to that end. "Aristotle saved his scientific soul by a breach with Platonism where Platonism had lost touch with Nature, but he retained from Platonism the view that truth is the preserve of the elite, and that social order must be based on acknowledged superstition. . .

"Cicero's disavowal of belief in the myths about the next world, among a circle of philosophic friends, implies no more than Aristotle's casual comment to his audience in the Lyceum on the political function of myths. . . . Cicero's interest in religious practice was confined to ceremonies which had some political importance. . . . The ancient writers themselves reveal openly enough that the object of the state cult was to keep the people quiet under the system of property relations that obtained. . . . Cicero points out how essential the institution of augurs had been in preventing such movements as that of Tiberius Gracchus to break up the large estates. . . .

"In the West the rulers of Rome achieved a degree of success in the control of society through superstition that was denied to the Greek oligarchies. Under the aegis of Rome the progress of public ignorance was assured."

Lucretius did not dare come out too openly against religion, which had suppressed science, but his long poem, "De Rerum Natura is the last great cry of Greek science, expressing not only its devotion to truth but its devotion to humanity. The poem is a protest against the dissemination of superstition by authority and an attempt to resist it." He was the last of the scientific observers to see that "the dripping from the eaves hollows a stone, the bent ploughshare of iron imperceptibly decreases in the fields, and we behold the stone-paved streets worn down by the feet of the multitude."

Only incidentally, Farrington tells us, is the poem "a war on popular superstition; the real object of its attack is the state cult, that cult of which Mommsen said that the essential characteristic was 'the conscious retention of the principles of the popular belief, which were recognized as irrational, for reasons of outward convenience'."

THE WELFARE OF THE PEOPLE

Tolstoy in his famous essay, "What is Religion?" wrote, "It seems to men natural that Government—which justifies its existence on the score of its care for the welfare of the people—must, to secure that welfare, wish to use only the means which can never do people any harm, and can only produce the most fruitful results. Government, however, has not only never taken upon itself this duty, but, on the contrary, has always and everywhere maintained with the greatest jealousy any false, effete religion prevalent at the period, and has in every way persecuted those who have tried to inform the people of the principles of true religion."

Aeschylus saw the same thing in his "Prometheus Bound". "But Aeschylus, of course, sees the problem in the light of his own convictions and in the terms of his own day, the brutal ignorance of the reaction with its ministers Might and Violence, the eager humanity of the enlightenment, and the danger of its association with the many-headed people." (Farrington, p. 84)

COMMUNICATION ALL IMPORTANT

The diversity of mankind in ideas, language, physique, has been promoted in the past by isolation, lack of communication and interbreeding, and by adaptation to a restricted environment. With technological improvement in transportation and communication, great changes are taking place. The part of educators is largely to communicate.

EDUCATION'S PART

"All environmental factors which influence the growth and development of human individuals are said to be educative. Therefore the home, the neighborhood, the church, and the community are educational agencies, as well as the school. Consequently educators are paying more attention to the educative influence of the environment," Robert J. Havighurst reminds us in "Environment and Education" (University of Chicago, 1942). W. Lloyd Warner in the same tells us:

"All modern learning theories involve the notion of the birth of an organism into an environment with which, during growth, it continually interacts, thereby achieving adjustment. The accumulated adaptive changes in the behavior of the organism are said to be what the individual learns."

This interaction involves in the education of the child communication of the ideas and conceptions characteristic of a culture, which Lawrence K. Frank in "Cultural Coercion and Individual Distortion", Psychiatry, Feb , 1939, explains, "prescribe what the individual may be aware of, how he will interpret it and respond to it, and whom he will believe".

DETERMINING MENTAL CONTENT

"Who communicates what to whom by what medium, under what conditions, and with what effects" as Douglas Waples puts it, in the American Journal of Sociology, May, 1942, will determine the mental content and emotional reaction of those communicated to, which in turn will effect the course of history.

Verbal communication is more recent and still less effective than through symbols. The ever increasing control of communication, with the consequent control of peoples, is explained in "Controlling Communication", pp 427-442, and the importance of this to those who control, in the chapter "Guiding Public Opinion", pp. 419-426, both in "War and Education" (Porter Sargent, 1943). A comprehensive study of what influences behavior and the forces that determine lives is presented in the 24th edition of this Handbook, pp. 105-130. The part that formal education plays in the social process of conditioning the individual is enlarged upon in the 26th edition, pp. 207-220.

"A TRIUMPH OF THE SPIRIT"

How and what was communicated to the American people in the first World War is vividly pictured by Morison and Commager in their "Growth of the American Republic" (Farrar & Rinehart, 1942), Vol. 2, p. 476. With what would now seem meager funds and a small staff, Creel "undertook to mobilize the mind of America. . . . Artists, advertisers, poets, historians, photographers, educators, actors were enlisted in the campaign and the country was inundated with a flood of propaganda pamphlets, posters, magazines, and newspapers. Altogether over one hundred million pieces of 'literature' were distributed by the indefatigable Creel, while some seventy-five thousand 'four-minute men' let loose a barrage of oratory at movie houses and public gatherings which prostrated the intelligence of the country. Motion pictures displayed to horrified audiences the barbarities of the 'Hun'; pamphlets written by learned professors proved to the more sceptical that the Germans had always been a depraved people.

"In this campaign of education none was neglected: school children learned to lisp the vocabulary of hatred; women's clubs titillated to atrocity stories, and foreigners were taught to be ashamed that they had not been born in America . . . It was such a triumph of the spirit as the world had never known, and brought about an intellectual uniformity and a social conformity from the effects of which that generation never fully recovered."

WHAT THEY SEE IN THE PAPERS

Kent Cooper, head of the Associated Press, in "Barriers Down" (Farrar & Rinehart, 1942) tells us how Reuters and Havas played the propaganda game for Britain and France for three quarters of a century until 1933, and with newspaper daily sales increased to forty-four and a half millions daily last year (Ayer), gives us a timely warning. "Every layman should be monitor of the sources of information open to him. He should note 'who said so', and thus he can learn to know what source he can trust".

Greatly improved techniques and technologies, enormously increased funds and staffs are available today for the control of the people's mental content and emotional reaction in World War II. Time, April 19, 1943, under the title "Communications: What They See in the Papers" gives a graphic picture of how the news is collected and prepared for consumption under control of great news associations, government departments, censorship civil and military, all controlled by those in control.

"In the British Commonwealth and in the most advanced Republics of America the handling of news is, as in Russia, one of the chief spectacles of civilization—but it is not a very tidy spectacle. . . . The American gets his news" through "his news-gatherers, the radio and the press" so that he is "sometimes confused, sometimes reduced to stupor; but in general, with some regional exceptions, he feels himself to be—and is—well informed. Well enough? . . .

RESTRAINTS ON FREE EXCHANGE OF NEWS

"Societies cannot be held together by law until they have been knit together by understanding. . . . As the deadly bewilderments and debaucheries of recent history have shown, this problem is enough to tax to the limit the minds and energies that would propose to solve it. Restraints on the free exchange of intelligence are all but universal in the world at war; calculated propaganda has become all but universal too. . . . Each of the United Nations has now learned thoroughly that war against the mind can be waged by hostile official propaganda; all may therefore agree that this kind of propaganda comes under the head of aggression, to be dealt with as such in the future. . . .

"A number of excellent political minds in Britain and America have brought the art of news-giving to a pitch of brilliance approaching that which news-gathering has achieved. . . .

"Official public information men, in the past decade, have begun to have kinds of influence and even of authority that used to belong to statesmen alone. . . . The responsibilities of those who win and survive this war will not end with feeding famished people but with letting them in on the learning, both humane and technical, that enriches peace. . . .

"Some day the media of intercourse may be free, and the important ones as responsible as they are free, that speech between the great regions may become more modest and exact, that respect for one another's differences and charity toward one another's faults may be taught through the air and on the screen, and that not only the facts but the schemes of those who would make the facts their tools may be known and judged by a healthy world society."

EDUCATION, SCIENCE, AND SANITY

How little we know of ourselves and the springs of our behavior. We are just beginning to learn of the importance of the earliest years of child life, though Ignatius Loyola centuries ago saw that control of the first five years would fix the personality. Few yet recognize how much irreparable damage we may unconsciously do even in the first year of life. Our Puritan ancestors believed children were born in sin and destined for hell unless baptized. Victorian sentimentalists thought of them as innocent little flowers.

THE ROOTS OF WAR

"Are hate and aggression part and parcel of human nature?" To such questions Child Study, A Quarterly Journal of Parent Education, has devoted much space in recent issues, and this was discussed by leading specialists at the Annual Institute of the Child Study Association, March 1, 1943.

"The Roots of War in Human Nature: Aggression and Hate in Childhood and Family Life" was the subject for one day. Chairman Austin H. MacCormick, Executive Director of the Osborne Association for prison improvement, keynoted, "Hate and aggression are constant components of crime and activate criminal behavior to a much greater extent than the layman realizes. . . . The psychiatrist knows that hate and aggression are factors in a very large percentage of all crimes. . . ."

"Until parents and teachers and family physicians and clergymen comprehend the implications of hate and aggression, face the fact that they are realities and not the ugly phantoms of some psychiatrist's imaginings, and recognize the need of turning these destructive energies into constructive and useful channels, we shall find ourselves forever involved in social and economic conflicts that are little short of war, and, generation after generation, in war itself."

Mary Shattuck Fisher, Professor of Child Study, Vassar College, answered the question "Does war begin in the nursery?" "As long as generations of adults grow up afraid of their own emotions and their children's, as long as adults try to have their children live up to standards which are impossible and unrealistic . . . we must expect that the majority of these children will be anxious and confused, or defeated and passive. Instead of having anger and aggression and hostility as temporary responses to real situations—responses which can be outgrown as problems are solved and more competence is developed—anger, aggression, and hostility become deeply rooted in the very core or structure of the personality."

IMPORTANCE OF EARLY CHILDHOOD

Dr. Karl Menninger, Director of the Menninger Clinic, Topeka, reminded the Child Study Institute that thirty years ago child specialists had little understanding of the importance of the early years. "It is not merely the fact that we do not realize the importance of children and child study which brands our civilization as warped. . . . Any civilization that makes the manufacture of bombs more urgent than the study of children is full of destructive hate and it is this that makes the task of earnest, thoughtful people so slow and difficult. . . .

"At present, by ignoring the fact that human beings have aggressive instincts which will find an outlet and which need education and direction toward constructive outlets, we seem determined that children shall be good while their elders are as destructive and cruel as possible. Naturally children look forward to adulthood as a time when they too will be privileged to be bad to revenge themselves."

"The repression of hostile impulses", Dr. Franz Alexander tells us in "Our Age of Unreason" (Lippincott, 1942), "is, in conjunction with anxiety, the core of every neurosis—a neurosis being nothing but a failure of the process of domestication."

THE HARM THAT MOTHERS DO

Dr. Menninger in his recent "Love Against Hate" (Harcourt, Brace, 1942) elaborates on "the crimes unwittingly committed against the child by the mother . . . such things as inconsistency, threatening . . . refusing his reasonable requests, ignoring his efforts to be pleasing or interesting, breaking promises, quarreling with him over trivial matters, impressing her own anxieties or worries upon him, discussing him in the presence of other people, embarrassing him, neglecting him, bribing him, lying to him, shielding him from the consequences of his own acts, comparing him unfavorably with others. The greatest crime of all, perhaps, is the inculcation of a dishonest, hypocritical philosophy of life."

A wise and experienced psychiatrist, Menninger reminds us that most children are reared by women who have been more or less frustrated by men and who in turn frustrate their children. So we have a vicious circle. Parents frustrate children, children become adults and continue the process. But our teachers and head masters were children once, many of them frustrated by women in this same way. The psychiatrist finds such neurotics in the schoolhouse, who interpret their sadistic animus as evidence of their own righteousness.

FRUSTRATION AND AGGRESSION

Freud's frustration and aggression hypothesis has been the basis of research at the Yale Institute of Human Relations for some years (Time, March 6, 1939). A hundred and fifty scientists, working with Gesell's infants, groups of deranged men and women, Yerkes' apes, and cages of rats, not only have made fruitful studies of the earliest years of infancy but they have learned "to apply this theory to social as well as individual behavior . . . to explain strikes . . . crime, the reading of detective stories, wife-beating, war".

"Frustration and Aggression" (1939), one of the first fruits, was the cooperative work of eight investigators, on the behavior of young children. They concluded, "Aggression is always a consequence of frustration", equally applicable to individuals or nations. John Dollard, one of the group, in "Culture, Society, Impulse, and Socialization", American Journal of Sociology, July, 1939, concludes from his researches,—“Growing up may therefore be seen as involving a series of frustrating as well as satisfying experiences; the least that can be said is that conflict in the individual life is inevitable and that socialization is always a frustrating experience. . . Growing up is not a smooth automatic process of assimilating the folkways and mores; on the contrary, society has to deal with a rebellious animal full of animal lust and anger. The domestication of this animal is without exception a process attended by conflict and strain. The conflict incidental to social growth is most visible in the case of defiant persons.”

UNDERSTANDING PERSONALITY

“A brilliant outline for the synthesis of the various disciplines into . . . an holistic approach to the study of the personality” is the way Dr. James S. Plant, of the Essex County Juvenile Clinic, Newark, New Jersey, characterizes Dr. Andras Angyal's “Foundations for a Science of Personality” (Commonwealth Fund, 1941). “The total biological process [of growth] is presented as a trend toward autonomy—as the ever-growing area of the personality's domination over its own fate” (Mental Hygiene, April, 1943). Or as Angyal puts it, “There is a strong tendency in the symbolic or conscious self to establish its own autonomy within the total organism: a state within a state. This creates a split in the personality organization which is greatly aggravated by the fact that the symbolic self tends to take over the government of the total personality, a task for which it is not qualified”.

This practicing psychiatrist not only clarifies his own task but renders valuable assistance to all who are interested in a better understanding of human nature in its normal or abnormal phases. Dr. Angyal's long vision over the whole course of life, in which the human episode is but a recent moment, helps him to understand how personality has developed and how, in the multiple adjustments and intricate adaptations to the environment, maladjustments have come about.

OUR ARISTOTELIAN INHERITANCE

A fundamental cause of personality disorders has been discovered and expounded by Korzybski. The appearance of a second edition of his "Science and Sanity" (Science Press, 1941), with a new introduction, was a notable event. That some thousands of copies of this tough epoch-making book have been purchased, read, and studied is something of a tribute to the American intellect. Biologists, neurologists, psychiatrists unite in declaring that it points the way to understanding and overcoming our social inadequacy, which brings on unhappiness, poverty, and war. In a searching and brilliant review, Dr. Hervey Cleckley of the University of Georgia School of Medicine (Mental Hygiene, April, 1943) observes, "It is interesting to speculate on what might follow if . . . a hundred thousand of the most influential persons in the United States" should have digested what is put forth in "Science and Sanity".

General Semantics aims not merely to make changes in the language we use, but to bring about a reorientation that will avoid the neurologic reactions and personality aberrations that result from training in the Aristotelian system. Two thousand years ago this helped man to better understand his relations to the external world, but today it is grossly inadequate, as has been shown by great thinkers, like Hans Vaihinger a generation ago in his "Philosophy of 'As If'".

The Aristotelian two-valued logic constantly confronts us with the choice of either-or and offers no other way out. Trained in this system, by which we try to live, we find it workable verbally but "not applicable to the structure of the world or to human experience". In this predicament, with no way out, frustration results. The Aristotelian 'is' of identity is taken literally, grossly deceiving us in supposing things identical, which cannot be. Those who live in a verbal world must rely on what the psychiatrist recognizes as "rationalization", having recourse to abstractions and losing touch with first hand living and so failing to participate in the experience of a human being.

Science and sanity may yet prevail when we are more fully aware of the forces that are at work to create all the frustrations and distortions of personality that now result in aggression and hate. As we learn more about the origin of our harmful mental habits, so inimical to personal happiness and the good life, we may be led to discard the two thousand year old Aristotelian logic.

GROWING AWARENESS

The growing consciousness of man for the wonder and beauty of this earth, due to his inherent and divine curiosity, institutionally suppressed generally since the Ionian Greeks, leads one to believe that there is little wrong with God's creation. But what our man made institutions have done to man and what man, obsessed with myths of righteousness and evil, has sadistically done to his fellows, is tragically reflected in Winwoode Reade's "The Martyrdom of Man".

Human institutions and the myths on which they are based have made possible what we call civilization. But though they have constantly been re-formed and much has been sloughed off once held sacred, the total result has been to reduce the Adam of the Garden, at times to the Man with the Hoe of Millet and Markham. Some believe these distortions of human behavior to be due to sin, and are 'agin it'. But the scientist is for understanding it.

Dewey holds something should be done "to secure full operation of what native intellectual capacity there is". And Robert Briffault, the British anthropologist, historian, and surgeon, in his "Reasons for Anger" inveighs against "stupidity deliberately, laboriously, vigilantly cultivated by the established institutions".

Our education is still traditional. Even our experimental schools do not follow the way of science as in the laboratories. Education is in about the state that medicine was in medieval Paris, a matter of theories and philosophies. Students of law and medicine today study cases. Educators might well do the same, their own cases and those of the great men of the world who escaped their ministrations, to find how they got that way. John Erskine in "The Complete Life" (Messner, 1943) tells not only of his own but of Montaigne's and Milton's, who evaded the stultifying influences of the schools.

Educators, like the rest of us, know but little. But the greatest handicap of our teachers is, that of the things they know, so much isn't so. Very little of what was once believed in other climes or times is believed true today. But education, in boasting that it preserves tradition, accents the old which is not wholly discredited as yet. Our educators are not alive, aware, or free. Their practices are ritualistic. Our good fortune is that there are exceptions, and therein lies our hope.

THE LEADING PRIVATE SCHOOLS

SOME FIFTEEN HUNDRED IN NUMBER WITH
CRITICAL DESCRIPTIONS

EXPLANATORY NOTE

The representative and more important private schools and junior colleges of the United States, about 1500, are here presented, pp. 131-592, listed alphabetically under cities and towns; cities and towns likewise arranged alphabetically in each state, from Maine to California and Hawaii. Schools for Americans in Mexico and Argentina are similarly treated.

Some 2000 other schools and junior colleges, about which we have less information, will be found in the Supplementary Lists, pp. 669-756.

The statistical paragraphs in bold face type give basic facts as reported by the schools,—for Boys, for Girls or Coeducational (Coed); the Ages of the pupils enrolled; the date of establishment (Est); the head, with degrees, colleges, and title. The enrollment (Enr) is classified as boarding (Bdg), Country Day (Co Day), and Day; the courses given, as college preparatory (Col Prep), academic (Acad), and special (Music, Art, Domestic Science, etc.). The number of the faculty (Fac) is assumed to include only full-time instructors. Tuition (Tui) with its various ranges, boarding and day, is indicated.

The type of ownership,—incorporated not for profit, partnership, proprietary; denominational influence or affiliation; colleges and associations by which the school is accredited and number of alumni are given where reported. Accrediting by state departments of education and by church boards, and membership in non-accrediting associations are not indicated.

Rapid change, tri-semester or four quarter schedules, with graduation at intervals throughout the year, make statistics on enrollment and college entrance in this year of change and confusion unreliable and practically meaningless.

Equipment and advantages unusual for the region and the rate attract boys and girls to Gould from all the New England states though the majority continue to come from Maine. Mr. Ireland, who succeeded Philip S. Sayles in 1940, has strengthened the academic work, inaugurated a well-organized health program, and plays an important part in the community. This unique institution which makes so strong an appeal to head masters has created for itself a definite place in our modern educational system. Tutorial in function, giving boys virtually individual instruction, it avoids the cramming of the regulation tutoring school. With adaptability and foresight, Mr. Hatch, a man of inexhaustible nervous energy, former member of the faculties of Bowdoin and Cornell, devotes himself zealously to his school and his boys. A summer session, Was-sookeag School-Camp, antedating the winter school by a year, is affiliated. See page 792.

In continuous operation for more than a century and a quarter, this Baptist academy was made a fitting school for Colby College in 1877, and was reorganized for boys only in 1922 when Mr. Hunt, former public school principal, took charge. On the roll of its earlier alumni are many names of more than local fame. Maine still continues to furnish many of the students, but other parts of New England, the south and the west are represented. College preparation is stressed, some eighty per cent of the graduates entering college each year.

The gateway to, and the metropolis of Maine, Portland still wears an air of mellow dignity which modern innovations and summer tourists have not wholly obliterated. Its eighteenth century homes and well kept shade trees enhance the city's natural loveliness. Extending along a saddleback about three miles long at the southwestern end of Casco Bay, it is the leading industrial city of the state and the home of many specialized manufactories

In the West End residential section is The Waynflete School, and nearer the center of the city the Portland Society of Art. The Portland Junior College holds classes in the local Y.M.C.A. Westbrook Junior College, in the Deering section to the west, is the oldest educational institution of Universalist origin in the country.

Coeducational for nearly a century and for a time under Universalist control, Westbrook was reorganized in 1925 as a non-denominational girls school and is today a full fledged junior college. The low rate and wide variety of courses, practical and in the arts, which Dr. Proctor has developed since he took over the school in 1933, have resulted in a tripling of the enrollment. Transfer curricula prepare for senior college and for business, professions, teaching and further work in the arts.

Endowed and well organized, Oak Grove School enrolls girls from many states and from foreign countries. Established by five influential and scholarly Friends who desired a "select school" for their children, it is still a Friends school though patronized by all denominations. Oak Grove was coeducational for seventy-five years, but Mr. and Mrs. Owen, convinced that the school for girls only was more wholesome for adolescents, reorganized it as such in 1925. Unusual in a country school are the contacts provided through Mr. Owen's position as state senator, and the foreign travel and graduate study of most of the faculty. A new quadrangle of six fireproof buildings of the most modern construction, four already completed, are among the material fruits of the untiring zeal of Mr. and Mrs. Owen and the devotion they have given their girls and the school in their quarter century as principals. From this school, established about the time the state was admitted to the union, have come governors, college presidents, U. S. senators, congressmen, court justices, and other public figures. First called The Latin Grammar School, preparatory to The Maine Literary and Technological Institute, now Colby College, and later known as Waterville Classical Institute, its first principal was Elijah Parish Lovejoy, anti-slavery editor and apostle of the Freedom of the Press. The present name was taken in 1883 to honor ex-Governor Abner Coburn who donated the institute building. Only boys are now accepted in residence. Although some local boys and girls attend as day pupils, the institute, unlike many of its kind in Maine, does not serve as the public high school.

Chartered by the General Court when the territory was part of Massachusetts "for the purpose of promoting piety and virtue; and for the education of youth in such languages, and such of the liberal arts and sciences as the Trustees shall direct," this old academy has been revived under Mr. Hyde, principal since 1927. Cyrus H. K. Curtis in 1928 gave over a quarter of a million dollars for new buildings and equipment. Vigorous, far-sighted, with unusual breadth and independence of thought, Mr. Hyde maintains this as a low priced school fitted to the needs of the boys and girls of the neighboring coast and islands, though some of the students come from farther afield. Through a cooperative plan, the girls of the home economics department, under supervision, cook and serve the meals. An increasing number of graduates go on to college.

Since 1936, when Mr. Gulick was appointed head master, the school has considerably broadened in scope. Member of a famous missionary family that played an important role in the development of the summer camp, he has had experience in New England colleges and schools. Alert to the needs of the boys, he has adjusted the curriculum to meet their individual requirements, and although college preparation is emphasized, interesting work is provided for those whose aptitudes lie along more practical lines. He has made opportunity for participation in community efforts available to his boys, and in 1942 opened the school machine shop for defense training courses for young men of the locality. Originally the co-educational Andover Academy, renamed in 1879 in honor of a liberal local benefactor, the school has since 1930 enrolled boys only. Although affiliated with the Unitarian Church for over fifty years, it is undenominational in practice. See page 796.

The capital of New Hampshire, a busy city on the west bank of the Merrimack river seventy-five miles from Boston, Concord still retains something of the charm of a residential village. The state house and the beautiful building of the New Hampshire Historical Society, presented by Edward Tuck, benefactor of Dartmouth, lend an atmosphere of individuality and distinction. Here the Rumford Press publishes many of our national magazines. The cross state route that formerly ran through the grounds of St. Paul's School now swings north through the valley of the Turkey river.

A new trend was given education in America in the establishment of St. Paul's. It was the first of the Church schools to make appeal to the new class that was rapidly acquiring wealth from the development of water power, textile mills and exploitation of the continent. In 1855 Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck gave his country place near Concord for "a school of the highest class for boys, in which they may obtain an education which shall fit them either for college or business, including thorough intellectual training in the various branches of learning, gymnastics and manly exercises adapted to preserve health and strengthen the physical condition, such æsthetic culture and accomplishments as shall tend to refine the manners and elevate the taste, together with careful moral and religious instruction."

The Rev. Henry Augustus Coit, then only twenty-five, was chosen by the trustees as the first rector. Of a family long prominent in American education, his early training had been under the Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, at whose suggestion he was later an instructor in the College of St. James, Hagerstown, Md. Dr. Muhlenberg's school at College Point, L. I., which later became St. Paul's College, in its eighteen years existence exerted a great influence on the future private schools in America, for among his pupils in addition to Coit were several future bishops who were later influential in organizing the earliest Episcopal church schools. From his master, Muhlenberg, Dr. Coit adopted the "in loco parentis" attitude, and from the English public schools which he had visited he adapted much. Even in outdoor life English influence was at first apparent. Dr. Coit encouraged cricket rather than baseball. The English schoolroom nomenclature, too, was here introduced to the American boy. St. Paul's still has "forms," but the "removes," "evensong" and "matins" of Dr. Coit's time are now forgotten. Most of the boys in the four upper forms have separate rooms. The young boys have "alcoves" in the dormitories similar to the "cubicles" of many of the English public schools. This custom here first introduced in the American private schools has been followed by Groton, St. Mark's and other schools.

So awe-inspiring a man was Dr. Coit that only in recent years have his old pupils been able to write of him realistically. Owen Wister describes him as "a stern, sad man in clerical black, born seven hundred years later than the days of his spiritual kin."

Arthur Stanwood Pier, now a member of the faculty, in his history of the school reviewed in an earlier edition of this Handbook, speaks of him "in character and zeal and temperament very like the man of wrath, John Brown . . . a ruthless fanatic." To John Brown whose aims and "actions he abhorred . . . his soul was akin." Following Dr. Coit's death, his brother Joseph Howland Coit, who had been vice rector since 1865, carried on, and later the Rev. Henry Ferguson, a St. Paul's "old boy."

Samuel Smith Drury was rector from 1911 for over quarter of a century. Priest, preacher and writer, a man of compulsive type, of great driving force, to his boys he was sternly aloof, to his aides an inspiration and a saintly man. During a period of exhaustive search for a new rector, following Dr. Drury's death in 1938, Henry C. Kittredge, one of two vice-rectors, son of the famous Harvard Shakespearean "Kitty", and author of several books on Cape Cod, was acting head for a year and a half.

Though St. Paul's boys no longer play the English game they are fully aware of what is "cricket." "Quite uncritical in his outlook," Mr. Pier says, the St. Paul boy goes out into the world with "an eagerness to join in some common effort for the good of all—if only some one will direct him where that common effort is being made! Again a qualification that indicates there may be something lacking in a school spirit that is solely one of cheerful cooperation." The largest of the Church boarding schools, St. Paul's enrolls over four hundred boys, some receiving partial remission of tuition or full scholarships. As many as thirty-five per cent of the boys have been sons of alumni.

It will seem to many an advantage that Dr. Nash, who came to St. Paul's as head master in 1939, prepared at a public high school in his native city. After Harvard he entered the Episcopal Theological Seminary where his father had long served. There, on the faculty, he established a reputation for broad-minded liberal teaching. At St. Paul's he early instituted, among other innovations, a department of Public Affairs with an instructor who devoted his full time to non-credit courses on social, economic, political and international problems, which developed in the second year to a credit course on Contemporary American Society. Aware of a changing world, his cheer, warmth and understanding have already brought new life and vitality to this largest of the Church boarding schools.

With wide, elm-shaded streets and an air of undisturbed tranquillity, Exeter resembles perhaps more than any other New England town an English provincial village. The second oldest town in the state, it was the seat of the legislature during the Revolutionary War and is still the county seat. The port of Exeter is on the tidal Exeter river that flows into Great Bay at Portsmouth fourteen miles away. The buildings of Phillips Exeter Academy are set on a spacious campus on either side of Front Street. The main building, designed by Cram and Ferguson in 1915, is a reproduction in brick and marble of the smaller building erected in 1794. The Plimpton Playing Fields extend from Court Street to the river, across which are the Plimpton Fields Beyond. Bordering on Front Street is the sixteen acre campus of Robinson Seminary, and Emerson School on High Street adjoins the Exeter campus near the stadium Encouraged by the immediate success of Phillips Academy at Andover, John Phillips established in his home town in New Hampshire a new academy which was opened in 1783. William Woodbridge was preceptor for the first five years. Benjamin Abbot, the second in charge, bore the title principal. He was trained at Andover under Principal Pearson and ruled over the institution with great power and wisdom for fifty years. Daniel Webster came to him for schooling in 1796. In 1838 Gideon L. Soule, who had already been a teacher in the school for seventeen years, succeeded Dr. Abbot, and in 1872 the fiftieth year of his continuous service in the academy was celebrated. Harlan P. Amen in his eighteen years from 1895 by strong and sympathetic leadership brought Exeter again to her ancient standards.

There were strong men on the faculty, too, none more famous than "Bull" Wentworth, the terror of whose name extended into other school rooms through his innumerable mathematics textbooks. Such men gave Exeter the reputation of being faculty controlled, more democratic than Andover which then was under autocratic dominance. No theological seminary as at Andover held to strict orthodoxy, so there was freedom to question. For generations graduates resorted chiefly to the less godly and more liberal Harvard. All these things may have prompted President Eliot to characterize Exeter as "one of the most precious institutions of the country."

Exeter influenced teaching at other schools and established a pattern that remains almost unchanged. But today the school catalog emphasizes, "the simplicity of an old New England village; the austerity of Puritan schoolmasters; the . . . earnestness and self-reliance of boys who earn their way," rather than the ancient maxims long repeated, "Exeter is still a hard school," "the process of learning is in the main irksome," "the pupil should bear the laboring oar," "from the past comes the ancient Exeter tradition of thoroughness, accuracy, and severity." The tradition of rugged democracy is made much of,—to bring out that there is no conscious distinction between rich and poor.

Dr. Perry, who comes of a distinguished educational family long associated with Williams College, has served as head master for over quarter of a century. Broadly tolerant, he fosters an unusual freedom of attitude and speech among the students. A gracious after dinner speaker, he is also in demand at commencements. Under him there has been a great expansion and reconstruction of the school plant. Harkness millions in 1931 brought many new brick structures and the Harkness Plan,—small groups of students about oval tables,—since adopted by a number of other schools.

But Exeter in its greatness transcends any time or group. Its able faculty and the Harvard tradition continue to attract from the best of the nation's product.

Since Mr. Kingsley came to the old Montpelier Seminary in 1938 he has raised scholastic standards, put the plant in order, planned and built a new and modern dormitory for women, considerably more than trebled the enrollment, and in 1939 remade the school into a four year junior college with a new name, continuing courses inaugurated in 1936. The needs of high school graduates are met through a great variety of practical terminal courses. A plan of cooperative housekeeping enables women students to live inexpensively by preparing their own meals after a six weeks training course. Established over a century ago at Newbury and transferred to Montpelier in 1866, the seminary was long popular in small towns and rural communities of the state, widening its appeal recently.

"To make school life a more real, less sheltered, less self-centered venture; to educate the individual in the light of what he can later do toward solving the problems of society," was Mrs. Hinton's vision in opening this coeducational preparatory school. And she has gone far toward realizing her ideal. Evening discussions, concerts, lectures, married instructors who build their own homes on property adjoining—give a characteristic flavor not found elsewhere. Vigorous, dynamic, broad-visioned, Mrs. Hinton is unsparing of her own interest and energy, spending vacations with groups of students in regions far from New England. Long an educational center, this delightful old town with its substantial Colonial houses is reminiscent of nineteenth century men of letters. A mile south of the center, crowning Seminary Hill, is the imposing plant of Phillips Academy,—the buildings designed by Charles Platt, the grounds landscaped by Olmsted Brothers. On the campus, outstanding among secondary schools, is still the old Theological Seminary. The Memorial Clock Tower with its carillon is a conspicuous landmark from afar. The buildings of Abbot Academy are grouped about a central green to the west. The plan of an old New England village was followed in laying out Brooks School, on Lake Cochichewick in North Andover.

The first incorporated school for girls in New England was named in honor of Madam Sarah Abbot, whose funds made possible the first building. Established "to regulate the tempers, to improve the taste, to discipline and enlarge minds, and to form the morals of the youth who may be members of it", for more than a century it maintained the even tenor of its traditions, undiverted by passing fashions. Daughters, granddaughters, and great-granddaughters of loyal alumnæ from every state in the Union turn to Abbot for their schooling. Bertha Bailey in her twenty-four years as head impressed upon the school something of her straight laced New Englandism. Today, under Miss Hearsey, the best of the old traditions have been retained and the school has taken on a modern slant in social as well as academic phases of the life. Extensive building since 1939 has added greatly to the attractiveness and efficiency of the plant. Preparation for the leading women's colleges is emphasized in a four-year course. More leisurely five-year preparation gives opportunity for work in the fine and practical arts. See page 852.

Of the two Phillips academies which have become so distinctive in American education, this at Andover, the older, was founded by Samuel Phillips, who, together with his father and his uncle John, deeded both land and money for the establishment of a school to be opened at Andover, where the grandfather of Samuel Phillips had been head master of the Grammar School. The donors proposed "to lay the foundation of a SCHOOL OR ACADEMY for the purpose of instructing Youth, not only in English and Latin, Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic and those Sciences wherein they are commonly taught; but more especially to learn them the great end and real business of living." Further "it is again declared that the first and principal object of this Institution is the promotion of true piety and virtue."

Opened during the Revolution, the school was incorporated in 1780 with the title Phillips Academy, the first chartered academy in New England. Among its early patrons were Washingtons and Lees from Virginia, as well as Lowells and Quincys from Massachusetts. The first head master, Eliphalet Pearson, had been a classmate of the founder at Dummer and at Harvard. A man of force and commanding presence, he was known to his awed students as "Elephant" Pearson. Later he was professor of Hebrew at Harvard and the Andover Theological Seminary.

When John Adams came in 1810 to the master's throne, twenty-three boys were enrolled. By 1817 the number had increased to a hundred, and during his twenty-three years Dr. Adams admitted 1119 pupils, nearly a fifth of whom became ministers. Under Samuel H. Taylor, a man of picturesque and striking personality, head master from 1837 to 1871, the institution gradually took on its present character. After his death, however, it declined in prestige until it was rejuvenated and brought in touch with modern methods of education by Cecil F. P. Bancroft, principal from 1874 to 1901.

Andover long remained conservative, less influenced by the Unitarian movements which have stirred New England, and perhaps for that reason Andover early became primarily a preparatory school for more conservative Yale rather than Harvard, which soon came under more liberal influences. Of the more than twenty thousand boys that have graduated from the school about sixty per cent have gone to Yale and perhaps twenty per cent to Harvard. Its ten thousand loyal living alumni are organized in numerous associations throughout the country and their continued interest through the years has brought increased endowments and gifts.

First of the head masters to give his whole time to administration was Alfred E. Stearns, in office for thirty years from 1903, alumnus of the Theological Seminary and of Amherst, under whose administration the old primitive austere atmosphere of Andover gave way to a richer life as Thomas Cochran, '90, a Morgan partner, brought wealth to the school to enlarge and beautify the plant, today an ensemble designated 'the loveliest group of buildings in America.' An enlarged teaching staff makes possible smaller classes and close and intimate supervision, though there is no study hall and to the occasional visitor Andover looks like a college. The boys wander from their dormitory rooms across the campus to their recitations. The archaeological museum, with its research workers, the art museums with special exhibits, add to the college flavor.

For the first time in its history the Academy in 1942 held a summer session, stressing the basic fields of mathematics, science and modern languages, and the development of physical toughness to prepare its boys more rapidly and effectively for war service.

Dr. Fuess is a graduate of Amherst, and before accepting the head mastership in 1933 had been instructor in English from 1908, secretary of the alumni fund, editor of the alumni magazine, and secretary for information. The official historian of Andover, he has published a series of biographies of national importance. From the first he has boldly established new policies and strengthened the bonds with the alumni through frequent visits. In numerous addresses all over the country he has displayed versatility, tact, and skill. It is his announced purpose to teach the boy "how to adjust himself to his environment and to remold it to his heart's desire." See page 793.

BOSTON, MASS. Pop 781,188 (1930) 770,816 (1940).

Once the literary center of the nation and the hub of the universe, Boston remains a city of individuality, with the provincial flavor of an old English town. It is also one of the world's greatest Irish Catholic cities, with expensive vicissitudes of inefficient government. The older residents no longer live in Boston, but have moved to the beautiful country round about, where they have created a life more English than the Philadelphians, less cosmopolitan than the New Yorkers. But the glamor of this lovely old city is still such that those that live within fifty miles boast that they are Bostonians. It takes about three generations of trusted wealth to make an old Boston family, though their roots may reach back to almost any time or place. The older families of today are descendants of the men who poured in from the smuggling centers to the north when the loyal followers of the king, who had made their wealth in the slave labor of the West Indies, left with Lord Howe in 1776. The China trade and later exploitation of western railroads and, after the war, mortgaging the South, have maintained their revenue. The trusted wealth of past generations, acting through financial institutions in conjunction with the wealth of the Catholic hierarchy, makes profitable political brokerage with those that run the machinery of government.

Boston was once foremost in education, and on its Board of Education served Puritan aristocrats, nationally known. It still remains a great student center, with higher institutions of learning in the city, Boston University (Methodist), Boston College and Emmanuel (Catholic), Northeastern and Simmons; across the Charles, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard, and Radcliffe; on the outer fringes, Tufts, Wellesley, Regis and numerous junior colleges and professional and vocational schools.

The private secondary schools in the Back Bay and the Fenway have dwindled in number as the wealthier Bostonians have moved out of the city. Brookline, the Newtons, Wellesley, Dedham, Weston, Waltham, Cambridge, Belmont, and Concord all have their private schools, separately treated.

This oldest endowed secondary school in the United States was established some nine years after the founding of Harvard College to prepare boys for that institution. Its work has continued without interruption. John Eliot, "Apostle to the Indians," when minister of the First Church of Roxbury, signed a statement with others of the town that they, "in consideration of their religious care of posterity, have taken into consideration how necessary the education of their children in literature will be, to fit them for public service, both in Church and Commonwealth, in succeeding ages. They, therefore, unanimously have consented and agreed to erect a free school in the said Town of Roxbury." In 1671 Thomas Bell, formerly a freeman of Roxbury, died in London, willing two hundred acres of Roxbury lands to the school and naming the Rev. John Eliot and two other officers of the First Church as trustees of the endowment.

"The Free Schoole in Roxburie," as it was called, was not then free in the sense of being supported by uniform taxation or free from all tuition fees, but for years the school was free to twenty boys in each entering class who lived within the limits of the original town of Roxbury. Today all within these limits pay $100.

William C. Collar, for more than half a century connected with the school, in his long career attained a national position in the educational world. Appointed a master in 1857 and head master in 1867, he resigned in 1907 and died in 1916. D. O. S. Lowell, a graduate of Bowdoin, became a master in the school in 1884 and was head master from 1909 to his retirement in June, 1921. Daniel V. Thompson, who came from Lawrenceville as his successor, maintained the high scholastic standards. It was in his regime that the school moved to its present site. In 1932 the trustees selected as his successor Mr. Northrop, once head of Brearley, later of the Chicago Latin School.

This oldest institution in New England for the higher education of women was established as an academy by the parishioners of the Congregational Church of the town of Bradford and until 1836 was coeducational. The school has been fortunate throughout its history in having as trustees men and women of unusual capacity and devotion to its interests. Alice Freeman Palmer long took active interest. The unusual advantages early drew students from all over New England, but for many decades the patronage has been national. During the century and more of its existence nearly ten thousand students have attended the school. The strong personality of Laura A. Knott, principal from 1901 to 1918, was long stamped on the life and work of the school. With Marion Coats, principal from 1918 to 1927, the great impetus toward the graduate courses began, culminating in 1930 in the acceptance of Bradford as a junior college member of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. The last decade has seen Bradford transformed from a New England academy to a collegiate institution of wide horizons, with an atmosphere of intellectual vitality and cultural awareness. Under Katharine M. Denworth, president 1927-1939, first steps were taken in an extensive campaign, and courses multiplied so that since 1934 only work of college grade has been given. Miss Bell was called from the faculty of Oberlin College in 1940. See page 901.

Endowed by General Sylvanus Thayer, the "father of West Point," the school attained prominence under Dr. William Gallagher, principal for twenty-three years. Since 1919 this successful college preparatory school has been under the direction of Mr. Southworth, formerly associated with Camp Marienfeld and once a junior master of Boston Latin School. He has played an increasingly important part in the life of the metropolitan community. Inaugurating a successful country day program, he has greatly enriched the course of study, especially in the social sciences, music, and art.

Brookline was the home of many 'firsts',—in schooling and municipal services, and in the quiet beauty of its residential estates. It still prides itself on being the model town it once was. With apartment house developments and the recent influx, the character has changed, but the town remains one of the choicest residential sections adjacent to Boston. The private schools are largely in the residence districts near Coolidge Corner and Washington Square, and in Chestnut Hill.

This successful progressive school has come to be socially accepted by discriminating Boston families, and because of its activities has become a national focus and a leader in progress in education. Liberal minded parents, desirous of bringing to Boston more progressive educational methods than were then available, called Eugene Randolph Smith, who had successfully developed the Park School in Baltimore, to organize a similar school here. He was extraordinarily successful in his twenty-two years as head master, adding constantly to the activities and plant of the school. Among the many features unusual in secondary schools are the courses in instrumental and vocal music for which school credit is given, opportunities for instruction in the decorative arts and sciences, the kitchens in which girls are given experience under home conditions, a completely equipped theatre and beautiful art and library quarters. Most of the girls go on to the major colleges.

The reputation made for Concord by Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, and the Alcotts is still potent and the town has long been attractive as a place of residence to a certain type of Bostonese. It is a literary shrine with the significance of England's Stratford or Germany's Weimar. A mecca of the patriotic, here was fired the "shot heard round the world." And here Thoreau in jail wrote "Civil Disobedience" which through Tolstoi and Gandhi shook to their foundations the world's greatest empires.

Its schools are in no way revolutionary. Concord Academy occupies the former Samuel Hoar estate and the adjacent property on Main Street. Middlesex was established at the turn of the century by Frederick Winsor with the aid of his brother, a Boston banker, and a group of Harvard colleagues. He had served as a master at Taft and Exeter, and for three years as head master of Gilman in Baltimore, the pioneer country day school. Here he eclectically combined the English house system, first introduced at Lawrenceville, with some of the features of the church schools of England. From the first the school maintained satisfactory college entrance standards but with a wider outlook, as evidenced by the courses in music and the fine arts. In the middle 1930's, to aid in recruiting pupils from a distance, Mr. Winsor traveled extensively, introducing his plan of competitive prize scholarships in the more distant states. Retiring in 1939, he died early in 1941. Mr. Terry, who succeeded, had been associate principal for a year and for some time previous assistant head master of Noble and Greenough. Tall and rangy, handsome and engaging, Mr. Terry is one of the half dozen "Grotties" who have been made heads of preparatory schools in recent years.

One of the nation's great secondary schools, Deerfield is the creation of its head master. Fresh from Amherst he came to head Dickinson Academy, the local high school housed in an ugly brick building. Today Mr. Boyden is one of the most influential men in secondary school education, playing an important part in the reorganization and planning of other schools. Former masters trained by him are following in his footsteps as head masters elsewhere. So great has been the confidence and friendliness felt for Mr. Boyden that in 1924 when the school through state statute lost the support of the town, heads of schools like Exeter, Taft and Andover cooperated in his appeal for funds for the present beautiful equipment. Here was first worked out a successful system of athletics for all. Social community activities and general participation in dramatics are made use of to train and develop the personality of each boy. Unusual, unconventional and natural are such features as the Sunday evening sings, and surveys and published reports by students on the geology of the country round about. The Amherst-Williams-Dartmouth tradition is strong, though an increasing number of graduates enter the 'big three,'—thirty-five or so each year. Mr. Boyden selects from his candidates the type he can develop with greatest success. Both he and Mrs. Boyden, who has long taught science and mathematics, have known individually each boy in the school. See page 801.

First of the junior colleges for men in New England to be awarded degree granting privileges by the Legislature, with Civilian Pilot Training and a Quartermaster course including instruction in the school of the soldier, Nichols meets the needs of graduates of preparatory and high schools who want practical training for business life combined with informal college activities and interests. Courses of one and two years are offered. Tests for special aptitudes are used to determine fitness for certain business pursuits, and some graduates each year continue under the Conrad Graduate Plan which provides one year of practical experience in the phase of business indicated and a final year at the college for specialization. Mr. Conrad, through his energy and quick vision, has been successful from the first, attracting boys not only from New England but from many other states and some foreign countries. Dr. Merrill is acting president in the absence of Mr. Conrad, a lieutenant-colonel in the Quartermaster Corps. See page 911.

Samuel Williston, wealthy manufacturer of the town, took the radical step, a century ago, of establishing and endowing an academy in which science, mathematics and English were to be held as honorable and to be pursued with as much thoroughness as the ancient classics. Josiah Clark, principal from 1849 to 1863, established classical courses, but under his successor, Marshall Henshaw, principal until 1876, Mr. Williston's ideal of a school was realized. Of the more than ten thousand who have attended the school about a third have entered colleges and universities; a fifth, the learned professions. Its teachers have gone on to college presidencies and professorships, and half a score have become principals of other schools. Mr. Galbraith, who succeeded Joseph Sawyer in 1919, had been a master at Middlesex School for nearly twenty years. He has broadened the appeal, modernized the outlook as well as the plant, and brought the standards up to those of the efficient college preparatory schools.

WILLISTON JUNIOR SCHOOL, with its own head master, E. R. Clare, has been maintained as a separate unit since 1916. It offers work of the fourth through the eighth grades and has its own faculty of five. The majority of the boys enter the senior school. See page 799.

"Groton has been a Church school, believing profoundly in the power of the Spirit and in the duty of service being passed from generation to generation by personal intimate contact . . ." wrote Frank Davis Ashburn, alumnus, and now head of Brooks School, in "Fifty Years On," published 1934. "For at least twenty-five years the texts and courses gave no hint that there had been men before Adam, that Charles Darwin and Andrew D. White, to name only two, had confronted established religion with the most startling challenge since Martin Luther . . . The code is strict, in some respects almost monastic . . . The question of the possible psychological cramping of a boy by too much of it is more serious. . . . The single spot in which the cramping has been most felt has been the spiritual: Individuals feel that there has been too much dogmatism and not enough reason; too much chapel and not enough freedom of thought."

Founded by Endicott Peabody for the cultivation of "manly Christian character, having regard to the moral and physical as well as intellectual development", the school was at first exotic and has perhaps failed of its great possibilities through too much inbreeding. Mr. Peabody's school has brought nurture and an approach to English public school education with a spirit of aristocratic democracy not only to leading families but to some of the socially ambitious. Some two thirds of the boys enrolled are sons of "Grotties", including nearly a score of Roosevelts, the native talent for publicity of some of whom has rather spoiled the seclusion long sedulously sought. For the past quarter century eight scholarship boys have been admitted annually on competitive examination,—boys who conform to type but who for economic or other reasons would have been barred from entering.

Mr. Peabody retired in 1940, but his lengthened shadow and the English practices he introduced still linger. A head prefect and six prefects are appointed annually from the upper form. They exercise a considerable measure of influence on the student body, which develops responsibility in the holders of these offices and lessens the load of the masters. The boys at Groton do not have separate rooms; all except the prefects live in cubicles. Denied their accustomed luxuries of living, they wash in cold water in tin basins. The two upper forms are provided with studies. The lower forms study in large schoolrooms.

Open-minded in introducing innovations in advance of his peers, particularly in the last few decades, Mr. Peabody added to the curriculum printing, woodworking, science in all its forms, music and drawing. The plan to have masters and boys live intimately together is perhaps more fully carried out by some of "Peabo's" old boys who, today in their thirties and forties, through his influence head such outstanding preparatory schools as Westminster, Middlesex, Belmont Hill, Holderness, Millbrook, among others. It is to his honor that some may have improved on his technique.

John Crocker comes from the family which for several generations has made paper, and made the town of Fitchburg, and has sent their sons to Groton. After Harvard he attended Oxford and Yale and was ordained at the Episcopal Theological School. He taught first at Andover and for ten years from 1930 was student chaplain at Princeton. Upstanding, wholesome, outspoken and inspiring, he recognizes the sound foundation on which he has to build and may be able to make the necessary adjustments to meet the changing conditions.

High academic standing and a fortunate situation near the estates of some of the older Boston families have made the academy in recent years one of the country's leading preparatory schools. It draws the majority of its students from local families, although as a result of special effort to recruit from further afield, about half the residents come from outside Massachusetts. Contacts of boarders with Milton homes are encouraged. The Harvard tradition is strong, although the school encourages boys who wish to enter other colleges.

As early as 1798 steps were taken by residents of Milton to establish a local academy which finally opened in 1807 and was conducted uninterruptedly until 1866 when, on the establishment of a town high school, it was closed. In 1885, on a new site, the academy reopened, remaining coeducational until 1901. Under Harrison Otis Apthorp it won national prominence. William L. W. Field, a naturalist and entomologist of scientific training, was head master from 1917 to 1942. Established as a fitting school for Wellesley College at the suggestion of President Shafer, this remained the function of Walnut Hill under its founders and long time principals, Florence Bigelow and the late Charlotte H. Conant. The school today sends its graduates on to many colleges and offers also non-college courses in an atmosphere of greater hominess and intimacy than formerly prevailed. Miss Davies, once a teacher

This large, well equipped school has an enrollment about equally divided between boarders and day boys. The founder, the late Frederick J. Fessenden, a teacher of Latin at The Hill School, was inspired by Amen of Exeter to open a school something like the so-called preparatory schools of England. For nearly forty years Fessenden has been widely known, and has enrolled boys from as far away as South Africa and Siam. In 1942 twenty-five English boys were included in the enrollment, most of them to remain for the duration. The organization and plant are most complete. Under the present head, son of the founder, who had been assistant prior to his father's retirement in 1935, the human element has been strongly stressed and interesting activities like the natural history museum developed. Another son, Frederick J., Jr., is business manager. See page 803.

Dr. Winslow, a master in the school since 1898, was made principal in 1908, and, with the change in title from Seminary to Junior College, president. Founded at the suggestion of President Seelye of Smith College as a preparatory school under the principalship of Mary A. Burnham and Bessie T. Capen, Burnham School was conducted after the death of the former in 1885 by Miss Capen until 1909. It then divided, Miss Capen retaining Capen House and maintaining a school under her own name, Helen Thompson continuing the older residence, carrying the Burnham name. Mrs. Emerson, a graduate of the school and of Smith College, who had previously successfully developed such schools as Emerson for boys and Howard Seminary for girls, took over the school in 1939. The heirs of Miss Burnham and Miss Capen gave her the records of both schools, thus making available the academic reports and names of all alumnæ in the original Burnham House which still continues to be the main residence. A reputation for sound work in music has already been established and the enrollment greatly increased. See page 854.

This quiet, tree-shaded village on the broad terraces of the Connecticut was the boyhood home and later the summer residence of Dwight L. Moody, the evangelist, who founded here the Northfield Schools—Northfield Seminary for girls, and across the river Mount Hermon. The Rev. William E. Park was made president of the schools in 1940, six years after the death of Elliott Speer. Today with their enrollment of more than a thousand, the two schools make up the country's largest private secondary school incorporated under one board of trustees. The alumni, spread out all over the globe, have made their contributions to Christian civilization and to the support of the schools. The annual summer conference started by Mr. Moody in 1880 still attracts hundreds of Christian workers.

Started in an old farmhouse with an enrollment of fifteen needy boys, from the first Mount Hermon has afforded abundant opportunity for a boy to secure an education or preparation for college. In the early years daily work on the farm or in the buildings was required. Today each boy works ten hours a week. With decreased interest from investments the rate has been gradually increased and today about ten per cent of the boys pay up to $700, which permits the acceptance of others for whom even the minimum rate is impossible. The founder's rigorous ideals and ideas of life and training for the guidance of youth continued under Dr. Henry Franklin Cutler, principal from 1890 to 1932. He was succeeded by the late Elliott Speer, a man of liberal religious views, who had been president of The Northfield Schools from 1926. He inaugurated policies quite different from some held by the conservative fundamentalists then on the faculty. Horizons have continued to broaden. Dr. Porter, long active in the larger work of the Y.M.C.A., whom Mr. Speer brought to the school in 1934 to head the Bible department, retains under the presidency of Mr. Park the post of head master to which he was elected in 1935. Northfield today is largely college preparatory in emphasis. A system of cooperative housekeeping shared by all students was planned by Founder Moody, to provide secondary school training for poor girls of the time. Today each girl works eight hours a week and the tone has been modernized under the leadership of Miss Wilson who came in 1929 from the faculty of Smith College where she had been a class dean and assistant professor of religion. The plan of having some girls whose families can afford it pay up to $700 to allow scholarship aid for others, is followed here as at Mount Hermon. See page 851.

A church school of the parental type, St. Mark's carries on all its activities under one roof. It was founded by Joseph Burnett, inspired by the success of St. Paul's and by the desire to have a similar school in his native town of Southborough. Assured of prestige from the first, it developed steadily in strength and efficiency under the capable management of William E. Peck, head master from 1882 to 1894. His successor, Rev. Dr. William G. Thayer who remained in charge until 1930, zealously maintained the ideals of the school. The life remained intimate, proscribed; admission rigidly restricted; but in his later years Dr. Thayer became liberal and progressive.

From its opening St. Mark's has had a system of monitors, six or seven boys chosen from the sixth form who "are the representatives of the school, have certain duties and a general oversight of the life of the boys. They are supposed to stand for the school ideals and to exert their influence and leadership."

This is now the center of a student council. Upper school boys have separate rooms. The three lower forms live in dormitories with windowed alcoves.

Francis Parkman, of the historical Boston family, an old St. Mark's boy, in his twelve years as head master brought a new alertness and straightforwardness which won friends in every direction. The life and the curriculum were enriched with military training and elective courses in music, politics, poetry. He resigned in 1942 to enter active service.

Mr. Brewster, of a family of churchmen, came to the head mastership early in 1943. Prepared for Yale at Kent School, he had six years of business experience before training for the ministry, and was rector of All Saint's Church, Belmont, Mass., when elected by St. Mark's trustees to head the school.

Established by William Dummer, Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, who in 1761 bequeathed his house and farm at Byfield for the purpose, this is the oldest continuously existent secondary boarding school. The school opened in 1763 under the celebrated Samuel Moody who made it a grammar school of the earlier type. Here were prepared for Harvard many boys who later became prominent in the life of the nation, including the founder of Andover. It was an unimportant local academy when Charles S. Ingham took over early in the century, and not until 1930 with the coming of Mr. and Mrs. Eames, who had been at Deerfield with Mr. Boyden, did it enter upon its present era of life and vigor. They brought youth, enthusiasm, and steadfastness of purpose to the building of a new school on the old, modernized the name, added to the acreage and buildings, and made it one of the important secondary schools of the country. Boys are encouraged through their own labors and effort to contribute to the material welfare of the school, and their initiative has supplemented the efforts of the head master in raising the considerable building fund. Established by Julia A. and Sarah P. Eastman as a preparatory school for Wellesley College, Dana Hall since 1889 has been under the direction of Helen Temple Cooke, a woman of great executive capacity with the highest ideals of womanhood. The junior school and graduate courses are incorporated as separate educational institutions, of which Miss Cooke is head under the direction of a board of trustees of which she is chairman. About two-thirds of Dana Hall graduates go on to the leading women's colleges, but to meet the needs of the day, such courses as child development, problems of democracy and typing are made available. Mrs. Johnston, former registrar at Bennett, in 1938 succeeded Dorothy Waldo. See page 855.

Within the last few years this flourishing junior school has developed, with courses from kindergarten to ninth grade, and a day enrollment, including in 1942 boys up to the fourth grade, almost double that of the boarding. The girls in residence are given gracious home surroundings, personal care and supervision, and work preparing adequately for any secondary school. Mrs. Sharp, who succeeded the late Mrs. Helen S. Since 1931 the upper grades and boarding department of Cambridge School have occupied their present home. The school had its beginnings in one established by Arthur Gilman in Cambridge to prepare for Radcliffe College, which was long the foremost school for families of Old Cambridge. In 1918 Mary E. Haskell became principal and for some years the school bore her name. In 1930 Mr. French, who had successfully reorganized the old Derby Academy in Hingham, was made head master. He restored the original name and made the school coeducational. The lower school, through the sixth grade, is still maintained on the old site on Concord Avenue, Cambridge. The boarding group, with separate houses for boys and girls, may be on either the five day or full week plan. College preparation continues to be efficiently carried on, but the rich curriculum provides generously for the development of individual gifts. See page 893.

One of the old New England Baptist academies, Worcester, under the direction of Dr. D. W. Abercrombie for thirty-six years from 1882, was reorganized as a boys school and as such gained a national reputation. From 1918 the school was directed by Samuel Foss Holmes as head master and George Dudley Church as registrar. Harold H. Wade, long a teacher in the school and for some years in charge of alumni relations, was head for ten years from 1933. A man of great nervous energy, though physically frail, he reduced the school debt, united the alumni, and increased the enrollment. Dr. Campbell, after some years as a Baptist minister, was a teacher of the classics in Hiram College, Ohio, when appointed head master late in 1942.

This preparatory school was founded by Theodate Pope, Mrs. John Wallace Riddle, to make educational use of many of the characteristic features of old New England farm life and activities. Not only in educational plan is the school her concept but, a talented architect, designer of Westover School, she devoted ten years of her life and most of her wealth to the planning and building of the school and its setting. The varied and extensive acreage provides opportunity for forestry, fishing, and hunting. The boys participate as citizens in all operations of the community. They are given opportunities in music, art, and the applied arts. Unusual is the college preparatory faculty which includes such men as L. H. Somers, former head master of the Adirondack-Florida School, head of mathematics here for some years, who acted as provost on the retirement of the Rev. Percy G. Kammerer early in 1940, and Richard Knowles who resigned as head of Philadelphia's Penn Charter School in 1941. Mr. Stabler took residence in 1941 after some years as chaplain and member of the faculty at the University of Pennsylvania. During the past year plans for a new chapel have gone forward in accordance with Mr. Stabler's purpose to stress the importance of religion in the lives of his boys. See page 816.

Mr. Sheriff, for some years dean and since 1923 head master, has developed a separate and well organized junior school offering work in the upper elementary and lower high school years, has put the administration and scholastic work on a sound basis and, alert to the needs of the day, in 1941 added to the curriculum a number of special elective courses to help boys who plan to enter the service. Sarah Porter, sister of President Porter of Yale, in the eighty-seven years of her life made this school preeminent as the "result of her own unusual character. She gave to hundreds of the best born women of the land that poise and stability of character, that combination of learning and good manners, which is a mark of the noblest American womanhood." From 1900 the school was continued by her nephew, Robert Porter Keep, and later by Mrs. Keep who had been a pupil. Their son, who bore his father's name, previously at Andover, with his wife carried on until 1943. As the school approached its centenary under their direction some modernization took place,—current events lectures, younger teachers. Sunday afternoon Bible classes were discontinued and for the geometry once required girls could take business arithmetic, including bookkeeping. College preparation was provided for, and the cultural finishing courses for older girls, long characteristic, reorganized along junior college lines. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, since 1920 in charge of Lawrence School, Hewlett, L. I., are young and modern in outlook, progressive in their tendencies and will undoubtedly build on this sound foundation a noteworthy school.

An interested and devoted board have made it possible for her to incorporate in the curriculum various attractive features, among them a training school for teachers. Boys and girls and an unusually attractive group of men and women, who constitute the faculty, work together unceasingly and happily toward common ends. The school catalog is produced in the printing shop, in charge of a veteran printer. An observatory was almost wholly constructed by the pupils, under guidance. The phrase, "the life of the school", is meaningful here. Everyone lives intensely, with the one end of accomplishment. HARTFORD, CONN. Alt 38 ft. Pop 164,072 (1930) 166,267 (1940).

The capital of the state, Hartford, with its well laid out parks and substantial public buildings, was early the model and inspirer of many cities that have since improved upon it. On the Connecticut river fifty miles from Long Island Sound, here are the home offices of many of the large national insurance companies, so every fire alarm is heard in Hartford and every obituary brings tears to the eyes of its leading citizens. But the river floods periodically wash away all tears and other things. The city wears an air of complacent repose, but the vigor of its life pulsates in new extensions to the north and west and blossoms periodically in a beautiful bridge or a notable building. When Mark Twain, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and Charles Dudley Warner lived here, Hartford well maintained literary pretensions. Trinity College, started patriotically as Washington College in 1823, became Episcopal under its present name in 1845. Hillyer Junior College is in the Y.M.C.A. building opposite the capitol; Kingswood, Oxford and Highland in West Hartford.

Simplicity, self reliance, and directness of purpose still characterize Kent, although it has become one of the nation's great schools. When the Rev. Frederick H. Sill started in the one farmhouse, the plan of self-help by which the boys do practically all the work was developed,—a system which has since been modified and copied by many other boys schools. The simple and severe Norman chapel is an architectural gem, but the religious life remains actual and sincere as in the early days when, sweaty in their soiled smocks from the fields, the school knelt before the improvised altar. For thirty-five years Father Sill devoted his whole life to his boys. He still lived simply, serving tea in his attic study each afternoon to the seniors, although devoted patrons had given a million dollars for the architecturally impressive plant. As coach and coxswain of the crew, he took Kent School boys to Henley every three years, which won renown for the school. There is no time at Kent for boys to wander. There are duties and varied activities indoors and out. And the demand for places is such that only the studious and earnest boy who will respond to the religious atmosphere should seek admission. Money is non-essential, for the school maintains a sliding scale of charges, assessing parents enough to meet the year's budget, in accordance with their ability to pay, from almost nothing to $1500. Father Chalmers, on the staff for two years as assistant chaplain and acting head master, has been head master since Father Sill's retirement in 1941.

Yale and Hotchkiss have from the first been intimately associated. Edward G. Coy, the first head master, a graduate of Yale, had served at the old Phillips Academy in Andover and brought with him much of the atmosphere of Andover. The trustees, too, have usually been Yale men, and Frederick S. Jones, president today, was for years Dean of Yale College. The graduates have generally shown preference for Yale, though in recent years the number entering other colleges has greatly increased and now a large delegation is sent yearly to Princeton and many enter Harvard, Williams, and M.I.T., and a few Amherst, Cornell and midwestern universities.

Bearing the name of its founder, Maria H. Hotchkiss, widow of the inventor of the famous machine gun, who provided plant and endowment, it was under Dr. Huber Gray Buehler, affectionately known as "The King", that the school developed its present sturdy character. Each year the King declared "there is only one rule in this school, Be a gentleman!" and the implications of this one rule cast a shade of responsibility over the previously unruffled brows of those lads from homes of wealth where pleasure dominated. Under Dr. Buehler's direction Hotchkiss became recognized as one of the foremost preparatory schools of the country. It still remains one of the last strongholds of the classics and pure book learning. The standard of work is as high and the methods and courses much the same as a generation ago. What are called the 'fundamentals', are still a subject of drill.

Mr. Van Santvoord, old Hotchkiss boy, Rhodes scholar, was appointed head master in 1926 after teaching at Winchester School, England, at Yale and at the University of Buffalo. Under him the plant has been greatly expanded and the Spartan simplicity and intensity of the life relaxed. Physical welfare and athletics for health and recreation, forestry and winter sports are stressed. Mr. Van Santvoord is sympathetic to the finer things of life, art and music, but the demands of the traditional curriculum afford little time for these and for new opportunities and new duties. As he has broadened and mellowed and broken many inhibitory bonds, he has won the confidence of his faculty and boys by his poise and reserved sense of humor. Though his interests still remain scholarly, which means academic adherence to traditional studies, Mr. Van Santvoord is more open minded and "progressive" than the older members of the faculty, some of whom should be pensioned. He has broadened the scope of his activities and now serves as trustee of neighboring schools and as a member of the Yale Corporation.

Established by Mary R. Hillard, who was trained at Miss Porter's and long headed St. Margaret's, Westover was for years permeated with her sentimental spirit of religion which made special appeal to the wealthy Episcopal families who sent their daughters to her. Something between a saint and a snob, she fostered a reputation for exclusiveness. Chapel, choir, confirmation play a large part in the life of the school. Carrying over from the Hillard days, there is charity work in support of a visiting nurse and the Grenfell Mission. Under Miss Dillingham, head mistress since 1933, Westover is no longer merely a finishing school. Scholarly, Bryn Mawrish, she has strengthened the faculty and today a larger proportion of the girls prepare for college. With less formality and greater freedom, the existence of boys in the neighboring schools and at Yale is recognized through joint glee club and dramatic performances.

This ancient academy, established on the bequest of Edward Hopkins, seven times governor of Connecticut Colony, entered upon a new era with the appointment of Dr. Lovell as rector in 1916. Breaking with the two century academic routine, he revised, expanded, and enriched the classical curriculum, and when the school moved to its present site in 1925 inaugurated a full country day program. He has built up a faculty unusual in its breadth of experience. Some are of foreign birth, others have studied and traveled abroad. For its first fifty years the school sent its graduates on to Harvard. After Yale came into existence it naturally prepared chiefly for that institution and more than fourteen hundred of its students have graduated from that college. This school is historically a connecting link between the academy and the high school. The movement to establish a free academy met with great opposition, for many at the time opposed free education beyond the elementary schools. The orators of the day were enlisted, including Daniel Webster, and the agitation which resulted did much to further the development of the high school system, but in Norwich no high school was established. Though amply endowed, the Free Academy planned as early as 1848 and incorporated in 1854 makes a nominal charge. Henry A. Tirrell, principal from 1903 to 1940, devoted himself to the interests of the schools, developing courses of unusual scope in industrial arts and home-making.

This well established school, long popular with wealthy New York families, has taken on a new tone since Mrs. Speer was made head mistress in 1938. To accomplish her purpose of developing in her girls some sense of responsibility and self-discipline, an increased amount of freedom has been allowed. Today the girls care for their rooms, wait on table, and are taught to prepare simple meals. The long-maintained standards of college preparation are continued, and certain advanced courses made available. Much is made of outdoor life, but sports like hockey and tennis now vie with the longtime favorite, riding. Opened in Lakewood, New Jersey, by Ethel Walker, the school has occupied its present site since 1917. The large brick building dates from 1933 when some of the Victorian mansions earlier occupied were burned. Since her marriage in 1921 to Dr. Terry Smith, Miss Walker has controlled the school through a resident head.

Westminster today carries out the ideals of Mr. Milliken, graduate of Groton, senior master at Brooks School from its establishment until 1936. Westminster boys enjoy to an unusual degree contacts with the head master and his family. Informal sports have been introduced and the prefect system revived. There is some effort to give the boys an understanding of how the school is run, and they may share in the activities of carpenter, gardener, etc., in the upkeep of the school. The musical boy has many opportunities to hear and create, and pleasant social relations are maintained with neighboring schools, boys and girls. College preparatory work is of high standard, and most of the boys enter leading colleges and universities.

Founded by William Lee Cushing, the inspiration of the school lay in the ancient Uppingham School, established 1584, in Rutland, England. Westminster graduates have entered Harvard, Williams, Cornell and other colleges, though the Yale influence has naturally predominated. On Mr. Cushing's retirement in 1920 the head mastership was assumed by L. G. Pettee, still a member of the faculty, who in turn was succeeded by Raymond Richards McOrmond, head master until 1936. Recent improvements and new construction, the cost of which was born by friends who gave the school over a hundred thousand dollars in 1943, have added to the efficiency and attractiveness of the plant. Through three generations Low-Heywood School has been in the same family. It was established by Mrs. C. E. Richardson, an Englishwoman of wide educational experience, and modeled after the best of the English private schools for girls. Louisa Low and her niece, Edith Heywood, took charge in 1883 continuing as far as practicable the policies and ideals of the founder. Mary Rogers Roper, grandniece of Miss Low and niece of Miss Heywood, who had prepared for college at the school, came as instructor in 1916, was later made co-principal, and on Miss Heywood's death in 1927 became head mistress. Following Miss Roper's death in 1939 her sister, Mrs. Fox, associate principal since 1935, took over the direction in cooperation with Miss Tilley, an Englishwoman, a capable executive long on the staff. Thorough scholarship and an interested oversight of all phases of the life of the students have always characterized the school. One of the most successful of the more recently established New England preparatory schools, Choate is named for its founder, Judge William Gardner Choate, long a resident of the town. It has come into its fuller life during the able administration of Dr. St. John, head master since 1908, whose good judgment, ready sympathy, and discrimination have been ably supplemented by Mrs. St. John's personal interest in maintaining a friendly, intimate atmosphere. The ideal held up to the unusual corps of masters is to give each boy what he as an individual needs. College entrance is kept in view in planning the courses, but with the flexible system each boy may take subjects chosen from different forms to suit his own needs. However, there is no effort to make the life easy and every legitimate incentive is brought to bear that the boys be held to earnest work. Separate divisions for honor students; small classes; special opportunities in art, music, and literature, and more recently in science, aeronautics and mechanics; orthopedic and physical examinations with an individual corrective and athletic program for each boy; and a close personal relationship with the boy's family all play a part in accomplishing Dr. St. John's ideal. Incorporated as a Church school under its present name in 1875, Saint Margaret's grew out of the local Collegiate Institute for Young Ladies. From the first it attracted a discriminating clientele. The spirit of the school today is in large part due to Miss Edell, whose modest but pervasive personality is particularly attractive to the conservative patrons. Distinction has been brought the school by the records of its graduates in the leading colleges which about half of them enter. But the limitations of college preparatory work do not have a restricting influence. For girls preparing for college, as well as those taking the broad general course, extra-curricular activities are encouraged. See page 857.

Horace Dutton Taft gave forty-six years of his life to the creation and maintenance of this school. He began life as a lawyer like his two brothers, one of whom became president and chief justice. But teaching drew him in 1887 first to Yale as a tutor in Latin, then, three years later, to his own school. He was a great head master, a tremendous worker, and inspired his boys to work, stamping his personality upon the school. Under him the only salvation was through hard work. But he won confidence by his geniality and large-heartedness, his comradeship in the classroom and on the playground. Mr. Taft retired in 1936 giving the school unconditionally to a self perpetuating board of trustees of which he remained a member until his death. Mr. Cruikshank's record at his own school which he established after teaching at Hopkins Grammar and Gunnery, influenced his selection as head master. Under his direction the courses of study continue intensive, preparing thoroughly for all colleges though nearby Yale casts its shadow. About a fourth of the boys continue to come from outside New England and New York.

Five of the Loomis family in 1874 drew up a charter for a school on what had been since 1639 the Loomis homestead, "for the free and gratuitous education of all persons of the age of twelve years and upwards to twenty years in all the departments of learning which are now taught or hereafter may be taught in the various grades of schools in this country . . . so far as the funds of the institute will permit." Members of the Loomis family and residents of Windsor were to have preference. The first catalog announced, "The curriculum includes courses leading directly to gainful occupations, as well as those preparatory to college." The agricultural course planned at that time was to provide "sufficient training . . . to enable a graduate who has taken it to start farming at once as a vocation."

The completion of a new social center and dormitory marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the school and Mr. Batchelder's head mastership. Previously at Hotchkiss, in developing the boarding department he has followed the pattern of the best New England preparatory schools, sending most of the boys on to college, though agricultural and business courses are available. The day school was coeducational until 1927, when three houses across the river were acquired, and as Chaffee School, the girls there segregated. For his faculty, Mr. Batchelder has selected younger men than are frequently found in similar schools. Pupils share in the useful labor of the school, caring for their own rooms, the classrooms, and the school grounds and athletic fields. The endowment makes numerous scholarships possible.

Buffalo is the second largest city in the state, an important port at the eastern end of Lake Erie. With electric power supplied by Niagara Falls, twenty-one miles north, it maintains many industrial plants, including the largest flour mill and grain elevator in the world. The University of Buffalo, the Albright Art Gallery, together with the schools described here, and some huge Catholic schools, Mary Immaculate and Sacred Heart, are the principal educational institutions. In Snyder, a residential suburb seven miles northeast, is The Park School of Buffalo.

The majority of the girls go on to Buffalo Seminary and the boys, after the fifth grade, enter Nichols School. Pre-school and kindergarten groups occupy a separate building. Numerous creative activities supplement the academic program. In 1941 Elmwood School, long directed by Miss Holbrook, merged with Franklin School which, under the conduct of Bertha Keyes for over thirty years, had prepared many Buffalo girls for college, but since 1939 had discontinued high school work. Miss Crawford had been head of Franklin for two years. The school continues to hold to high standards, with emphasis on acquainting its pupils with civic activities and responsibilities.

Recent developments in this college preparatory school are the addition of subpreparatory grades, a summer school, and admission of girls to the day department of the lower school. Northwood has sent over three-quarters of its graduates to the large eastern colleges. Opened as the Lake Placid Club School, the first unit of the Club Education Foundation, the name was changed in 1927. Small classes, patronage restricted to families eligible for membership in the club, and intensive study of each boy are outstanding features, and naturally much is made of winter sports and outdoor life. Dr. Flinner, who is supported by a strong faculty, was for fifteen years head of Huntington School Boston. See page 818.

The first Episcopal Bishop of central New York established St. John's as a diocesan school in the buildings of the old Manlius Academy, founded in 1835. The return to the earlier name was made in 1923 during the regime of Gen. William Verbeck, head master from 1888 to 1930. His son, Guido F. Verbeck, on the staff for many years, was head master for ten years, until his death in 1940, when General Singleton succeeded. The military is now a separate department, with the work of the R.O.T.C. used to develop "leadership, poise, initiative, and citizenship." Along academic lines, the emphasis is on college preparation.

Offering two years of work at the college level, this junior college has grown out of the school established fifty years ago by May F. Bennett, perhaps the first of her generation of school mistresses to independently maintain her own conception of what was desirable in the education of girls. She developed a school that, in addition to academic work, offered advanced specialized departments to the direction of which she called leading artists. After her death in 1924, the school was carried on in accordance with her wishes by her co-workers, Miss Carroll and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rann Kennedy (Edith Wynne Matthison), the latter in charge of the dramatic arts until 1940. Music, fine and applied arts, the household arts, child training which involves work with the little children in the nursery school laboratory, and the academic work still hold to the standards which early gave Bennett its reputation. The gift of a new school house and other new and adequate buildings, together with an enrollment of nearly a hundred, and a loyal body of alumni and enthusiastic patrons were some of the fruits of Mr. Pulling's first decade at Millbrook. He opened with twenty-five boys in the primitive buildings of an old farm, after teaching experience in such dissimilar schools as Groton and Avon Old Farms which resulted in a broad and liberal spirit toward traditional school activities. Interest in the individuality and aptitudes of his boys, and success in meeting their needs and in encouraging real interests in a thoroughly masculine atmosphere are outstanding characteristics.

Opened as The Lebanon School under a board of trustees including head masters of many neighboring schools, this was for eight years under the direction of Charles H. Jones. In 1938 on the death of the president, Charles S. Haight, who had given financial and moral support, Mr. Heyniger purchased the school and is now president, head master, and treasurer. Prepared at Lawrenceville for Princeton, after teaching in China and graduate study at Columbia he returned for a short time to Lawrenceville, then had a successful career with General Motors. Two years as assistant to the head at Lawrenceville prepared him for his present work. Renaming the school for a family prominent among the first Shaker settlers, he restored and renovated grounds and buildings and made extensive changes in personnel and policy. Stressing individual attention to his boys, good academic standards and manual work, he has won the liking and support of the boys and their parents.

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y. Pop 6,930,446 (1930) 7,454,995 (1940).

With the war, London has lost so large a proportion of its population that New York has become the greatest aggregation of homo sapiens on the earth's surface. Into its swirling vortex, the sink of a continent, are drawn the restless and ambitious from every state and every country. In their mad rush through its narrow canyons, they seek their pot of gold, fabulous salaries or palatial penthouses. Behind the plate glass windows of Fifth Avenue is displayed the loot of centuries from every land. Here the clash of creative and experimental minds of many ethnic strains has carried man's aspiration and social conscience to new pinnacles. The greatest number of art centers, research laboratories, medical groups and hospitals, bear evidence. With the war the purse strings of the nation have passed from Wall Street to Washington. The centralizing tendency in education, now so obvious in the extension of Federal control, has been for some time apparent to the discerning in New York, the seat of the great philanthropic and educational foundations.

The handiwork of man changes as rapidly as the populace. Stupendous creations dazzle the outlander,—bridges thrown across great stretches of marsh and water, subways that tunnel through miles of rock and under river. Approaching from the sea, the skyline is the marvel of the continental visitor. The air man, before coming to earth on the new city landing field, sees a citadel of watch towers among estuaries and marshes over which, to sprawling suburbs, great viaducts reach fingerlike.

Historically the city of the Dutch, of Tammany, the Vanderastors, of La Guardia, today the native New Yorker is a rarity. The greatest Jewish city in the world, less than half the population are Jews, with half a million Russians and about as many Italians. Salaried executives rear their families in Westchester, Long Island, or Jersey. The great mass of New Yorkers sleep far from midday's madding crowd and, through underground tubes in which they struggle for place, are belched out and shot up in express elevators to office or loft. Art and book collections perpetuate the fame and fortunes of Rockefeller, Frick, Morgan and Whitney, offering great educational opportunities.

The colleges and universities of the city enroll over a hundred thousand. Undergraduate activities are centered in uptown campuses,—Columbia, Barnard on Morningside Heights; the College of the City of New York a little to the north; New York University and its Hall of Fame on University Heights across the Harlem; Fordham, Catholic, near Bronx Park. Most of the great graduate schools, law, medicine, education, except for Columbia's Teachers College, are scattered about the lower city, especially around Washington Square.

The professional and vocational schools lie generally to the south, between Central Park and 42d Street. The private schools range from the conservative and haughty to the most progressive and radical. Some of the girls schools provide residence for those from a distance who are attracted by the varied musical, dramatic, and other advantages of the metropolis. A few schools including two or three of the oldest in the city, lie west of Central Park. But the more recently established schools that appeal to the socially elect are all to the east. Brearley and Chapin are in the reclaimed smart region bordering on the East river.

As a matter of convenience the schools of Long Island, including Brooklyn, are treated as a group. Staten Island schools will be found listed under New York City.

Oldest existing private secondary school in the United States, Collegiate traces its history back three centuries to the early settlement of Manhattan by the Dutch. For two hundred and fifty years it was maintained as a parish day school, but in 1887 became a grammar school for both boys and girls, with a fixed tuition fee; in 1891 preparatory; and after 1894, for boys only. Since 1934, a pre-primary grade for little boys and girls has been conducted. The school has moved progressively northward with the development of the city. Incorporated in 1939 as a separate institution, the school is still sponsored and controlled by the Consistory of the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church through a board of trustees. Mr. Parkhill, formerly at Lawrence-Smith, succeeded Cornelius Boocock in 1934.

From the Finch School which for more than thirty years had been offering work of college grade in cultural and vocational courses, developed this junior college incorporated in 1937. Mrs. John O'Hara Cosgrave (Jessica G. Finch) here worked out her ideas on the correlation of classroom and studio work with the unlimited opportunities of the city. Her sane and wholesome magazine articles and books addressed to parents of adolescent girls have widened her circle of influence. Finch girls are kept in touch with current affairs in a vivid and realistic way. Before most school heads were aware of the need, Mrs. Cosgrave inaugurated in 1942 various practical courses to meet the demands of the war, and these have continued to multiply. See page 904.

Important contributions to modern education have been made by this school. Its published materials pertaining to all departments of elementary and secondary school instruction are numerous, and have had a great influence on educational thought and practice throughout the country. The school owes its origin to Abraham Flexner, whose interest in modern education was responsible for a grant from the General Education Board the income from which Teachers College uses to support experimental work in elementary and secondary education. Otis W. Caldwell, director of the school for twenty years, was a leader in the teaching of science in the elementary school. Lester Dix, on the faculty of Teachers College from 1932 and for a number of years associate director with Jesse H. Newlon, was in charge for three years from 1937. Since 1941 Dr. French has directed the school, with the assistance of Gordon R. Mirick, A.B., M.A., Michigan, M.A., Columbia, as principal of the

The large classes and small budget of the public school situation have been retained. The children live and work in a cooperative rather than a competitive atmosphere, with the curriculum of the first years based largely on the study of their environment. Music and rhythms, painting, modelling, dramatics, and handicrafts are emphasized throughout. Children beyond the fourth grade must meet all the standard achievement tests. A special class is maintained for children with reading and personality problems. The June camp is considered an essential part of the school year. A high school opened in September, 1941.

One of the first country schools to be located near a metropolitan center, Riverdale was established by Mr. Hackett on grounds adjoining Van Cortlandt Park, which despite the growth of the city still have a sense of spaciousness and country surroundings. College preparation has been emphasized from the first, Riverdale students making outstanding records on the C.E.B. examinations, but the curriculum has shown unusual breadth in music and more recently in art. A liberal weekend policy makes it possible for boys who live nearby to keep in touch with their families, and for boys from a distance to enjoy the educational advantages of a world center. Day boys are transported in school buses from Manhattan and Westchester.
The entire plant, valued at more than a million dollars, was turned over to a board of trustees in 1925 by Mr. Hackett. Camp Riverdale in the Adirondacks, independently organized, has been maintained since 1912. See page 820.

This well known school bears the impress of the unusual women who have directed its policies. Clara B. Spence, the founder, a woman of strong and gracious personality living uncompromisingly up to her ideals, held the implicit confidence of her patrons for thirty years. Even at the beginning of the century, when the social graces were of more importance, she developed in her girls something of social consciousness. On her death in 1923 the school came under the direction of Charlotte S. Baker, long co-principal. The spring teas and sewing classes of Miss Spence's day passed and a new era began in 1932 when the trustees, many of them alumnæ, invited Valentine Chandor to merge with Spence her own school, opened in 1917. Her personality and intellectual interests were stimulating to students and alumnæ. The trustees' confidence in Mrs. Osborne, whom they brought from a successful career at Miss Hewitt's as head mistress after Miss Chandor's death in 1935, has been justified.

This busy, active group from nursery through high school grew out of the little Montessori group Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Vanderlip started on their porch for their own children. In 1925 they turned over their estate to the school, the family retaining some control through membership in the board of trustees. This was relinquished in 1941 when the school was reorganized under a board of parents. Since 1917 the school has had a succession of notable executives,—Dr. Ernest Horn, Wilford Aikin, Morton Snyder, and Arthur H. Sutherland. The present head has directed the fortunes of the school since 1928, taking in his stride some advisory supervision of the Hudson River School in Dobbs Ferry, the Halsted School, Yonkers, and the Home School of Scarsdale. Well along in its second century, this smoothly running institution, perfectly equipped, well organized and capably administered, enrolls girls from conservative families all over the country, preparing most of them for college. It was founded at Middlebury, Vermont, by Emma Willard, a pioneer in the education of women. In 1819 an offer of financial assistance drew the school to New York and in 1821, on invitation, it came to Troy as the Troy Female Seminary. In the next fifty years of its existence more than fifteen thousand young women were enrolled, many of whom became teachers and spread the influence of the school far and wide. Among these Mrs. Russell Sage, a member of the class of '48, was later a teacher in the school. In 1892 the school was reorganized under its present name. The architecturally beautiful home which the school has occupied since 1910 was the gift of Mrs. Sage. The late Eliza Kellas, president of both Russell Sage College and the Emma Willard School from 1916 to 1928, left her impress on the lives of the thousands of girls who came under her firm hand. Miss Wellington, former director of admissions at Wellesley College, appointed principal on Miss Kellas' retirement in 1942, has added a junior boarding department, courses in business and home making for the older girls, and more than doubled the day school enrollment by offering work in primary and intermediate grades. Miss Lay, director of publicity at Wellesley College from 1941, joined the staff here in 1943. See page 862.

This great national preparatory school has greatly increased in numbers, equipment and popularity under recent head masters. The beginnings of the school go back to the Rev. Isaac V. Brown, a Presbyterian clergyman, who was succeeded in 1834 by Alexander H. Phillips, member of the family that founded Andover and Exeter. Then for forty-five years from 1837 the school was under the direction of Samuel M. Hamill. The executors of John C. Green, an early pupil who had amassed a fortune in the China trade, purchased the school from Dr. Hamill, endowed it, and in 1882 appointed as head master James Cameron Mackenzie who here for the first time in America introduced the English "house system", later widely copied by other U. S. schools. The boys below the upper form live in houses presided over by a master and his wife, assisted by one or two unmarried masters. Every house is a home unit, and there are inter-house instead of inter-class contests in athletics. The effect has been to preserve and foster individuality.

Characteristic customs and practices, developed during the regime of the Rev. Simon John McPherson from 1899 to 1919, so vividly depicted in the stories of Owen Johnson, under succeeding head masters have faded as have the early Presbyterian leanings. Under Mather A. Abbott, head master from 1919 to 1934, the school plant was enlarged, the academic standards raised, and an effective system of health supervision put into operation. Self help and scholarships make the school possible for about seventy boys of limited means.

Mr. Heely quickly stepped into the front rank of head masters. In consonance with the tradition that the character of the school changes with each new head, his initiative and energy have brought new developments, including Harkness funds for the conference method of teaching. See page 823.

This oldest boarding school for girls in America, since 1911 offering full college work, was founded by the Countess Benigna, daughter of Count Zinzendorf of Saxony. Eleanor Lee, grandniece of Washington, was among its pupils as were Chancellor Livingston's daughter, Cornelia, wife of Robert Fulton, two daughters of Nathaniel Greene and others representing the old Colonial families, Dutch, German, Quaker, French and English.

Around old Colonial Hall, erected in 1748, cluster memories of the French and Indian Wars, and during the Revolution it served as a military hospital, sheltering hundreds of wounded Revolutionary heroes. The great majority of the girls continue to come from Pennsylvania, though many states are represented and loyal alumnae from all over the country continue to dower the ancient institution with gifts. Dr. Heath, clean cut, idealistic, born in the Virgin Islands of missionary parents, received his early schooling in England. Offering a wide range of courses at the college level in fine, liberal, and practical arts, and with expanding plant and facilities, this school now entering its second quarter century developed from a little group established by Mr. and Mrs. Harcum and conducted jointly until the death of the former in 1920. A college graduate, a pupil of Leschetizky and Philipp, Mrs. Harcum, a Virginian, brings something of southern warmth to her very human relations with her pupils, and to the atmosphere of the college as a whole. The girl's social adjustment, interest in the intellectual, enjoyment of the arts, and realization of her own

Once the first city of the nation, Philadelphia is still first in its number of home owners and has long held third place in population. To the outsider it seems an unexciting place which has lent its name to scrapple and cream cheese and to a certain type of lawyer and capon. Its older families like those of Charleston have pride in their provincialism, and their inordinate zeal in preserving local customs and institutions have made them easy prey to satirical writers and dramatists. Among the old, new-old and recent families, the names of Biddle, Widener and Wanamaker carry weight.

At the crossing of the principal thoroughfares, Broad and Market Streets, stands the City Hall, a political monument of a former generation. About Independence Square center the pre-Revolutionary landmarks—Independence Hall, with the sacred cracked Liberty Bell, and Carpenters Hall, where met the First Colonial Congress. North of Market Street are Girard College and Temple University. Southwest of the City Hall about Ritzenhouse Square the old aristocratic mansions are fast giving way to shops and apartment houses. Temple University is in the older section. At West Philadelphia, across the Schuylkill, are Drexel Institute and the University of Pennsylvania.

To a greater extent than in any other large city, wealthier residents have abandoned their town houses and migrated to the suburbs. Private schools have naturally followed and many are found in the attractive suburban sections of the city itself. Overbrook, to the northwest, lies partly in Philadelphia and partly in Merion. Germantown, largest of the suburban districts, is seven miles northwest of the City Hall. Here are many fine old pre-Revolutionary houses. Chestnut Hill, most beautiful of the outlying parts of Philadelphia, stretching along the wooded slopes of the valley of the Wissahickon Creek, is four miles north of Germantown. Oak Lane, east of Chestnut Hill, lies at the northern edge of the city and has attracted various day schools.

The schools in the farther suburbs are treated under their own towns. Along the Main Line, one of the most beautiful series of suburbs in the country, well known schools, including many for defectives as well as for Bryn Mawr preparation, will be found at Wynnewood, Haverford, Bryn Mawr, Devon, Berwyn, and Malvern. North of the city, among the Montgomery county hills, there are private schools in Rydal, Meadowbrook, and Bryn Athyn. In the outlying southern districts, private schools are at Chester, Swarthmore and Lansdowne.

Founded by the first Bishop of Pennsylvania, the Rev. William White, this ancient institution was granted a charter and ten thousand acres of land by the legislature in 1787. Since the turn of the century it has absorbed two other institutions, the Blight and the DeLancey Schools. More than five thousand boys of old Philadelphia families have attended the academy since 1850, and it is today the largest of the Episcopal schools. Mr. Haslam came to the school in 1921 from St. Paul's, Concord. Energetic and definite minded, he has increased enrollment and plant, and broadened the scope to include a substantial music program, hobby shows and a self help plan.

One of the few non-sectarian private secondary schools in Philadelphia, the academy with its elementary school was founded by citizens of Germantown, and is controlled chiefly by residents of that aristocratic suburb. The school building, perhaps the oldest in the country which has been devoted continuously to secondary education, has been modernized. The new primary school building is separate. Dr. Osbourn, former master at Lawrenceville and Tome, head master since 1915, has added interesting special courses in the upper school.

The importance and influence of this largest of the Friends Schools in and about Philadelphia is due in large part to the vision and devotion of Stanley R. Yarnall, connected with the school from 1898, principal from 1906 until his retirement in 1941. A considerable waiting list and wide influence in various educational associations are the rewards of the sound progressive methods and modern educational practices fostered. The school was a member of the eight year study group of the Progressive Education Association, representing the conservative wing of that movement. The progressive element was strengthened in the appointment of Mr. Fowler as principal. Headmaster for eighteen years of Tower Hill School, Wilmington, which he made a powerful influence throughout the country, he is not a Quaker, but is in sympathy with Quaker ideals.

As early as 1701 William Penn gave a charter to a school that had been in operation a dozen years. It is still conducted under his third charter, 1711. Richard Mott Jones, head master for forty-two years, brought the school national reputation. He was succeeded in 1918 by Richard M. Gummere, under whose administration the school developed in numbers and influence and moved in 1925 from the city to its present site. When Dr.
Gummere resigned to become chairman of the Board of Admissions at Harvard in 1935, the trustees elected as his successor
Dr. Richard Knowles, who resigned from his executive post in 1941 to return to teaching. The present head, on the faculty for two decades, is like his cousin Richard a member of a family of Friends long noted as educators. Broader than many, the Penn Charter upper school urges each boy to concentrate in some field in which he does work beyond college entrance requirements. A cooperative individualism is encouraged in both faculty and student body and each boy above the sixth grade is expected to spend a fifth of his time on hobby subjects.

City of steel and great wealth, Pittsburgh has for years been the city best known to the artists of the continent for whom Homer Saint Gaudens has made it a mecca. The director of the department of fine arts of Carnegie Institute has a roving commission to bring annually the best work of two continents for exhibition. The main building of the Institute covers an area larger than does the Capitol at Washington. Mellon Institute, with its banks, is a Greek temple nine stories high. The University of Pittsburgh, coeducational, dating from 1787, is in Schenley Park. Duquesne University, a Catholic coeducational college, was established in 1878, and Pennsylvania College for Women, in 1869. Industrially important, Pittsburgh has the world's largest glass, electrical machinery, and air brakes works. The business section is on the tongue of land between the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers. Most of the private schools are in the hilly East End section.

Rich in traditions, this well known school is unusually well equipped to prepare efficiently for college, and to hold and develop the interests of the boy to whom college requirements are but incidental. Long regarded by its own discriminating clientele as the best preparatory school, The Hill has perhaps grown too large to justify the superlative. The story of how John Meigs, son of the founder, Matthew Meigs, coming to the school in 1876, at the age of twenty-four, in the following thirty-five years brought the school from an obscure venture starting with two teachers and twenty boys to an institution of forty masters and three hundred seventy-five boys, has been interestingly told by his biographer, Dr. W. Russell Bowie, in "The Master of The Hill." John Meigs, with a genius for organization, abounding vitality and a passionate zest for life, had extraordinary power over his fellow men and gave himself not to their bending or breaking, but to their making.

Dr. Alfred G. Rolfe, who directed the school after Dr. Meigs' death in 1911 until Dwight R. Meigs in 1914 entered upon his duties as head master, again directed the school for a few months in 1922. From the faculty of The Hill has come educational leaven for many a secondary school. Since 1920 the alumni have been in control. After Dwight Meigs resigned in 1922 Boyd Edwards, long a friend of the Meigs family and later head master of Mercersburg, was head master for six years. Dr. Wendell, former Olympic hurdler, has come up through the school. Since 1928, when he was made head master, he has received various academic and educational honors.

The management of the school today is shared by the faculty through three committees on administration, curriculum, and extra-curricular activities. The Sixth Form Committee supervises student cooperative government. Standards of work have always been high and few Hill graduates have failed to pass their college examinations. The Hill is proud of her boys and the families from which they come. That Hill boys are proud of their school, too, is evidenced by large gifts and the number of sons of alumni on the roster. "Kiski" was founded by the late A. W. Wilson and R. W. Fair. William H. MacColl, who died in 1938, and John J. Daub who entered military service in 1942, were co-heads for many years. In 1941 the school was reorganized and reincorporated under a new board. Mr. Clark, its president, is also head of the school. He has vigorously remodeled the curriculum to fit current needs, instituting earlier than in most non-military schools courses to prepare his boys for war conditions. In 1942 the work courses were consolidated into a single farm project in which all the boys participate. See page 829.

MARYLAND

Baltimore is still the city of endless scrubbed white steps and the home of America's most articulate boobophobe, H. L. Mencken, who characterizes it as having the "frowsy, unkempt, out-at-elbow, forlorn air of a third-rate lodging house." Mencken's autobiography of his joyous, boyous first twelve years, "Happy Days", is a vivid picture of Baltimore life in the eighties. Though it rewards the reader with many a belly laugh it is, despite denials, a detailed study of American mores and morons.

Once famous for its markets and good living, the city still retains much of its local color, customs and cuisine.

On the Patapsco river, just below the city, the British fleet was repulsed in Revolutionary days. Today tourists flock to the Walters Gallery, where Francis Scott Key's "The Star Spangled Banner" is preserved in the original. The birthplace of some of the country's most precious educational advances, here in Johns Hopkins was the first graduate school for research in higher education, and here the first country day school.

Peabody Institute and a few private schools are still in the city. Goucher College for women in 1942 moved to its new suburban campus. In Roland Park are Calvert School, Johns Hopkins University, Gilman and Roland Park Country Schools, Byrn Mawr School, Girls Latin, and Notre Dame of Maryland. In Ruxton, nine miles north, is the Greenwood School, and in Towson Loyola High School. In Mt. Washington are Mount St. Agnes and St. Paul's Schools.

This colorful, live school was one of the first progressive institutions to be put on a substantial and solid basis. Especially in its early days it owed much of its support and patronage to idealistic and liberal Jews of the type that have done so much in times and places for this country. Today the staff of the school and more of the patronage than formerly are of Gentile origin. Eugene Randolph Smith here worked out his methods that won national prominence. Mr. Froelicher, son of one of the founders and member of a Christian family prominent in education for two generations, has carried on the progressive tradition since 1932. Margaret F. Coe, connected with the lower school since 1917, has made Park School more influential through publishing its Studies, "Curriculum of the Lower School" and "Aims of the Park School." Something of the soundness of the work, which appeals to professional and professorial families from Johns Hopkins, Goucher, the State University and the city schools, is indicated by the number of graduates that achieve along academic lines and in the fine arts.

This modern country day school developed from the oldest school in Roland Park, a small group conducted from 1894 by the Misses Katharine and Adelaide Howard and from 1899 by the Misses Corinne Jackson and Bertha Chapman. The open air feature was established by Nanna Duke Dushane, principal from 1912 to 1922. The present site and buildings have been occupied since 1915. Academic standards are high with college preparatory diplomas given only to those girls who pass college entrance examinations. A branch of the Peabody Conservatory of Music, established at the school, enables children to correlate music with their regular work. Miss Castle has been head mistress since 1922. In 1939 resident accommodations were made available through cooperative arrangements with Mrs. Frederic C. Lee of nearby Gawyn.

A year after the school was incorporated, 1935, Miss Fowler resigned and Miss Watkins, who had been assistant to the principal at St. Catherine's, Richmond, was appointed. Conventional educational ideas still prevail, but Miss Watkins has modernized and added to the plant, and broadened both the curriculum and outside activities. Music and art departments have been strengthened and the girls are adequately prepared for college by a capable faculty.

This first Church school of the English type in America has passed its centennial. Dr. William Augustus Muhlenberg, who had first introduced the English Episcopal school system at Flushing, L. I., sent his chief assistant, Rev. J. B. Kerfoot, to be the first head master. Here, too, another pupil of Muhlenberg's Dr. Henry Augustus Coit, taught until he was called to organize St. Paul's at Concord, N. H. In 1844 the school was chartered as the College of St. James. Closed during the war, it reopened in 1869 under Henry Onderdonk, who continued as head master until 1896. Seven years later when Adrian H. Onderdonk, his son, took charge the name was changed to St. James School. In his thirty-six years as head master, Mr. Onderdonk, a strong and lovable personality and a great teacher, was a hero to his boys. Under him the "home life," "individual attention" and the "honor system" were not empty phrases, but actualities. He became emeritus in 1939. Mr. Drake, for a year on the faculty and previously for four years at St. Paul's in New Hampshire, has ably carried on the traditions, devoting himself to the best development of his boys' capacities. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington, D. C. Pop 386,869 (1930) 663,091 (1940).

The world's present center of interest, Washington today is the maddest maelstrom of war and propaganda activities. Hordes of dollar-a-year men from the great industrial and financial centers, an ever-growing number of alphabetical bureaucracies, though some have been transferred to provincial cities, have in the past two years swelled the population to a million.

Described by magazine writers as the "Biggest Boom Town", the "Capital of Confusion", with the hundreds of thousands of clerks and stenographers on the federal pay roll increasing monthly, with school plants taken over by the Army and Navy, apartment houses by foreign agencies, and hotels jammed with ambitious industrialists who wish to be near the spigots, improvised living is difficult.

Behind this passing show is a permanent population of government employees who carry on, whatever the political complexion, and a great staff of working scientists who push forward the frontiers of knowledge. None of these has a vote or a voice in the government. They live under the dictatorial autocracy of a junta appointed by the nine young men of the Supreme Court.

At its worst in the sepulchral memorial sculptures under the capitol dome, some freshness has been brought to Washington architecture in recent years. Among the more beautiful buildings, outstanding are the Pan American Union, stimulating and refreshing in its architectural detail and arrangement; the Academy of Arts and Sciences by Bertram Goodhue, a remarkable example of purest Greek architectural design, and the Folger Shakespeare Library, architecturally chaste. Pope's pantheon in memory of Jefferson stands where the tidal basin and the cherry trees are. Pope's other pantheon, in memory of Mellon, houses the collections of the aluminum magnate, the accumulation of which greatly enriched a London Jewish art dealer and elicited the bon mot of the year, "It's perfectly Duveen."

The attractions of Washington have made it an educational center. The Catholic Church, with characteristic foresight, has taken advantage of this for its higher institutions of learning—the Catholic University, Trinity College, and Georgetown University. George Washington University falls short of the hope and plan of the Father of his Country.

Today trade invasion of the older residential region from Lafayette Square to Dupont and Thomas Circles has driven the costly new mansions and legations to Sixteenth Street, where they extend for miles to the north. Finishing schools have flourished on this soil and some few still remain in the neighborhood of Dupont Circle. The more substantial college preparatory schools are rapidly deserting this region for the hills north and west of the city. Some schools have crossed the line and have such Maryland addresses as Garrett Park, Silver Spring, Edgemoor and Bethesda. The Chevy Chase schools, although over the Maryland line, use the Washington post office as do a few others across the Potomac in Virginia.

Founded as part of Georgetown University by Bishop John Carroll, this oldest Catholic preparatory school in the country has been independent since 1919 when it moved to its present plant across the Maryland line. Offering the traditional Jesuit training in the classics, it also prepares for technical schools. A lower school was opened in 1940.

A little broader and more tolerant spirit than is usual in college preparatory schools is apparent in the school founded by Mrs. Holton and Miss Carolyn H. Arms. The junior college as well as the lower school is characterized by individual curriculums, an informal but stimulating home life, and sympathetic understanding. Miss Hodder, Mrs. Holton's niece, assistant principal for some years, took over the active direction in 1941. See page 907.

The scholastic standards of this school have always been high, though its attitude is liberal toward art and current events and the advantages of Washington. Miss Madeira established her school in Washington after experience as a teacher in Friends School and as first head mistress of Potomac. Married in 1917, widowed ten years later, she holds strong convictions on what she considers democracy and has few snobbish tendencies. In the new quarters occupied since 1931, the country day department for the established city clientele supplements the boarding school. About two-thirds of the graduates go to college.

High standards, a conservative tone, and a gracious atmosphere have always characterized this school. Elizabeth J. Somers, founder, and Adelia Gates Hensley were succeeded in 1924 by the late Jean Dean Cole, for many years assistant head, who retired in 1938. From the first, before the time of the junior college, the advanced courses were accredited by leading colleges and universities. Today the seminary covers the work of the three final high school years, preparing largely for the well organized junior college. Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd, associated with the school since 1936, have brought new life and vigor, and a breadth of culture and outlook which have won the enthusiastic support of patrons and the well organized alumnæ. In 1942, when their beautiful and well equipped plant was taken over by the Navy, they found eight ample and commodious new residences in Spring Valley, and nearby office and classroom accommodations which were made available to their students after the Christmas vacation. "Sidwell's Friends", established and conducted for over fifty years by Thomas W. Sidwell, justly earned a reputation for sound scholastic training which has been fostered by his successors. During the head mastership of Albert E. Rogers, now head of the neighboring Landon School, the school moved in 1938 to new buildings on the site which had been used since 1922 by the junior department. The large representation of the Washington legations which has always added color and interest has changed with the war, but the enrollment still represents an interesting cross section. Mr. Zavitz, an instructor in the school from 1914 to 1919, later directed the Antioch School in Ohio, was head master of Chateau-de-Bures, France, then principal of Cincinnati University School and came to Washington from the head mastership of Friends School, Baltimore.

In a quarter of a century Miss Noland has built about her own personality a school with a reputation for exclusiveness. A Virginian, a hard rider, she demands a good seat of her girls. She holds to strict ideas of 'study' and maintains long cherished ideals of combining sport with academic prowess. Well-to-do families from the north and west fancy they find here a flavor of southern aristocracy. Miss Charlotte, as she is known, without the usual college training, leaves the scholastic work to the academic head, Catharine Wellington Hoppin, B.A., Vassar, with graduate work at King's College, London, but inculcates something of greater value, a sense of social responsibility. Her girls work with the neighboring poor children, black and white. The atmosphere of the old south,—the negroes, the well appointed stables, the less well appointed living quarters,—permeates. In 1942 military training was introduced.

This outstanding school has set standards of scholarship and conduct for schools of the section for over forty years. Founded by Newton M. Anderson and Charles A. Mitchell, teachers in the University School of Cleveland, at first it drew the majority of its boys from the north and middle west, but during the regime of Howard Bement from 1927 to 1936 the appeal was broadened to include families from the south and the eastern seaboard. Mr. Fall, a student at The Hill under Dr. Bement, came directly to Asheville from Williams in 1928, and served successively as teacher of mathematics, registrar, assistant head master, and, since Dr. Bement's death, as head master. The faculty, selected with discrimination from all sections of the country, are zealous in their devotion to the task of preparing each boy for success in college.

Since 1917 Riverside has become one of the largest and most rapidly growing military 'prep' schools in the country. Sandy Beaver, its creator, whose title came to him from his service on the governor's staff, is a two-fisted six-footer, forceful, hard headed. He has a smile and charm of manner that go with his boys and patrons, and account in large measure for his success. His teachers are well paid for their part in recruiting pupils. The cadets here live a strenuous life, but get much as a result. The junior school is separately housed and has its own activities. The junior college department was organized in 1941. The school plant in Hollywood, Fla., formerly the winter site, has been turned over to the government for use as a gunnery school for the duration. A summer session is maintained. See page 838.

Miss Pape, a public school teacher, at the turn of the century opened a school of her own with thirty-five pupils and seven teachers. Five years later it was combined with Haskell School and took the name Haskell-Pape, returning in 1908 to its original name. Pape was the first school in the city to have a kindergarten, the first in the state to have a Parent-Teacher Association, and the first two troops of Girls Scouts to be chartered in the U. S. were Pape School pupils. From the first the school has played a prominent part in raising the scholastic standards of the region, and graduates of the school have been adequately prepared for leading colleges and universities. French is taught in every grade.

From the base of supplies established by General George Rogers Clark at the head of the falls of the Ohio in 1776 grew the little settlement of Louisville, named for Louis XVI of France, which, after his conquest of Vincennes, was incorporated on the South shore of the river. The French influence was strong up to the 1880's, coming up from New Orleans and Natchez by way of the river trade. Today the manufacture of tobacco products and hard liquor makes the city one of the important distributing and industrial centers of the South. The social life is gracious, reminiscent of the old South. The corruption of the civic life for over two generations is portrayed in George R. Leighton's "Five Cities".

One of the earliest Louisville schools, Miss Barbaroux's, united in 1868 with Miss Belle Peers' and after four years continued as "Miss Belle's" or the "Home School" until it was incorporated in 1882 as "The Kentucky Home School". The corporation has lapsed but the name and the school continue. Since 1910 it has been under the direction of the present heads and a well trained faculty. Maintaining scholastic standards equal to those of the good northern institutions, the school sends about three-fourths of its graduates to college, many to the large eastern institutions. Since 1929 the school plant has been owned by a holding corporation which leases it to the principals. Few schools have more devoted alumnæ. Miss Anderson has long played an important part among the girls schools of the region.

At the close of the War between the States, William R. ("Old Sawney") Webb and his brother John opened a small school in a little hamlet south of Nashville. Their extraordinary teaching ability attracted boys from all over the south and the school soon became a center of influence throughout the region. Alumni claim that Webb has fitted more future Rhodes scholars for college than any school in the country. Here have been trained head masters for many southern schools. One son left to establish his own school in California. Another, the present principal, was a teacher at the school as early as 1897 and on the death of his father in 1926 took full charge. No attempt has been made to build elaborate equipment, and many of the boys still board in private families. The school has a large body of loyal alumni, the majority graduates of southern colleges.

For thirty-eight years the school has been directed by the McCallie brothers, men of social and business acumen whose father, a Presbyterian minister, founded it. Maintaining the popular regional military drill but without over-emphasis, they have developed academic standards and athletic facilities comparable to those of northern schools, and in a recent "Study of Secondary School Standards" were rated "very superior" among the forty southern schools studied. Through a Bible course and the honor system stress is put on the development of Christian character, but not at the expense of the academic and physical. Most of the graduates go on to college. CINCINNATI, OHIO. Alt 490 ft. Pop 455,610 (1940)

Soon after the Revolution, the Society of Cincinnati, an organization of Colonial army officers, founded this city. It is to the German settlers of 1848 that it owed the development of cultural interests far in advance of most American cities. Music and art still play an important part in the life of many of its citizens and a proportionately large number of schools promote these arts. Extending fourteen miles along the Ohio river, it was a great inland port in the days of river transportation. In the residential section rising to the hills live the Tafts and Longworths. Its corrupt city government overthrown two decades ago, Cincinnati has since been well administered by a city manager. As such, Clarence A. Dykstra made the reputation which secured him the presidency of the University of Wisconsin. North of the city in Burnet Woods Park is situated the municipal university, largest of its type in the country. North in College Hill is Ohio Military Institute. Fifteen miles northeast on Indian Hill is the Cincinnati Country Day School. The Conservatory is in Walnut Hills.

The late Henry Harrison Culver founded this military school, provided the site and first buildings, and brought as first head Colonel Alexander Frederick Fleet. The school remained in the family until 1932 when ownership was transferred to The Culver Educational Foundation. Brig. Gen. Leigh R. Gignilliat, commandant from 1896, was superintendent from 1910 to 1939. Colonel Gregory, his successor, who as dean from 1935 had been largely responsible for Culver's emphasis on college preparation, has introduced instruction in the arts, for which a new art and music building was added in 1940 with an artist in residence. Cavalry, artillery, and infantry senior units of the R.O.T.C. have long been maintained. For over quarter of a century the United States War Department has given the military work of the school highest rating, and in 1941 it was made an honor naval training school—the only institution to carry both ratings. John Badlam Howe in his will left funds to found this Episcopal School for the promotion of "Sound Learning and the Christian Education of American Youth". A junior R.O.T.C for boys under fourteen was installed by the War Department over twenty years ago. Colonel Bouton, former head of the history department and superintendent since 1934, has given greater emphasis to academic standards through a department of guidance and measurement. A speech clinic is a recent development. Courses prepare for liberal arts and scientific colleges or for business. But the first objective is retained—the training of Christian gentlemen. BLOOMFIELD HILLS, MICH. Alt 850 ft. Pop 1281 (1940).

Early in the century, George G. Booth, newspaper publisher and patron of the arts and crafts, established his residence twenty miles from the center of Detroit, five miles south of Pontiac. In 1927 the village was incorporated to preserve the rural character of the region.

The five educational institutions and church which have been established here by Mr. and Mrs. Booth on the three hundred acre tract which was their estate, bear the name "Cranbrook", Mr. Booth's ancestral village in England. Reserving only their residence, they have given land, buildings, equipment and endowment funds to the development of Christ Church Cranbrook, Brookside School Cranbrook, Cranbrook School, Kingswood School Cranbrook, Cranbrook Academy of Art, and Cranbrook Institute of Science. The Cranbrook Foundation, created in 1926, was the recipient of virtually all of Mr. Booth's fortune, as well as substantial gifts from Mrs. Booth, totaling approximately $17,500,000. Masterpieces of sculpture and the decorative arts adorn all the institutions, which, with the exception of the church and Brookside, were designed by Eliel Saarinen, distinguished architect and president of the Cranbrook Academy of Art, for whose work here he received the gold medal of the New York Architectural League.

Strategically situated midway in the waterways of the Great Lakes, Detroit early became a city of commercial importance, and before the advent of the motor car had settled down with an air of respectability about its notable civic center. Ford, General Motors, two great wars, have thrust the city's industrial tentacles out into the surrounding country. Ford and General Motors technical and labor policies, together with such excrescences as the Shrine of the Little Flower have kept the city in the headlines. Here started the bank holiday which marked our financial nadir. Cadillac, who founded the settlement here early in 1701, La Salle, who made it a stopping place on his way to the Gulf to plant Christian missions in the Mississippi valley, and Chief Pontiac have been commemorated in popular cars. Henry Ford's educational activities center about Dearborn and River Rouge to the north where he established his huge, self-supporting Trade School. His great store of American antiquities are displayed in Greenfield Village to which he has transported Mary's Little Lamb Schoolhouse and Cape Cod windmills, and in the Edison Institute Museum which spreads over eight acres. In the city the interests of the people at large are indicated by the huge enrollment of the Cass Technical High School. Some of the older private schools are still in the city. In the beautiful country to the east and north lie great estates and modern developments served by the University School in Grosse Pointe, the Cranbrook Schools in Bloomfield Hills. To the west, Detroit Country Day School has occupied its present site since 1925. Five miles northwest of the city, in Farmington, is the site of the Ford Republic (not a project of Henry Ford), a two hundred acre farm on which the boys do most of the work.

The second city of the country, and perhaps in the world, stands at the crossroads of the nation where the transcontinental and north and south railways touch the lake routes, and is the world's greatest market for agricultural products. Here the ore from the north meets the coal from the central states. And here, where the winds from the prairies sweep over the lake, political crosscurrents meet in conventions. Carl Sandburg, poet of the region, has described Chicago—"Hog-Butcher for the World, Tool-Maker, Stacker of Wheat, Player with Railroads and the Nation's Freight-Handler..." Chicago's luridly colorful past is still perpetuated in the red brick parochial schools of the late mighty prelate Cardinal Mundelein, in Insull's dominating building where the civic opera is housed, and in the Tribune Tower of the still vital Colonel McCormick. But the virile spirit that developed a noble lake front is today bringing about a renaissance of civic spirit.

The University of Chicago, established in 1903 on the Midway Plaisance of the World's Fair, was put in the front rank by President Harper and has been kept in the headlines by President Hutchins who, though he preaches medievalism, practices a belligerent modernity in university and public life, and maintaining sane independence, unmatched among college presidents, holds that a university is for something more than playing football or preparing for a job. Some of the preparatory schools are also on the South Side, Harvard School for Boys, Faulkner and Orthogenic Schools. Southwest, and separated from the city by a golf course and a residence district, is Morgan Park, long time home of the military school of the same name, and more recently of the Loring School. In the fashionable North Side above the Chicago river, Francis W. Parker and the Latin Schools, Boys and Girls, are within the city limits.

Far sighted and public spirited Chicago citizens over eighty years ago purchased thirteen hundred acres of land bordering on Lake Michigan as a site for an academy. The school is now an outstanding college preparatory institution, its property augmented by gifts of adjacent land. Among the patrons and trustees are many whose names are potent in the mid-west. In 1913 the trustees invited John Wayne Richards from Hotchkiss and Yale to succeed William Mather Lewis, now president of Lafayette. For a quarter century under Mr. Richards' direction the academy increased in importance and dignity, during the early years a fortress of the academic in the midst of a welter of the military. Sons of western families who would otherwise have been sent to eastern schools were here prepared for the great universities. Mr. Bowditch, former freshman dean at Harvard, for two years head master of Park School, Indianapolis, brought to Lake Forest in 1941, has emphasized guidance technique, strengthened the advisory system and increased the number of activities available to the boys. Mount Carroll Seminary was established by Frances Ann Wood and Cinderella Gregory, New York State women, and administered by Miss Wood, later Mrs. Shimer, for forty-three years. In 1896 the name was changed and the school affiliated with the University of Chicago which is still represented on the board of trustees. The present plant was built during the thirty-three year regime of the Rev. William Parker McKee who retired in 1930. Under Dr. Bro, formerly with the University of Chicago Press, who took over the direction in 1939, the first two years of preparatory school have been discontinued and the four year junior college supplemented by a coeducational summer workshop in drama, art, and writing.

A colorful, active life with many opportunities for art, dramatics, and shop work characterize this unusual college preparatory school. It was founded by the Rev. R. K. Todd, a native of Vermont and a graduate of Princeton, whose grandson, the present head, 'Skipper' to his boys, has learned from his boys as much as they from him. The catalog, "original work of the boys from cover design to finis", is very different from that of the ordinary preparatory school. Orson Welles, a former pupil who has brought the school widespread publicity, continues to be interested in its activities and methods of instruction. He and Mr. Hill were inspired to remake masterpieces of the drama which today in book and phonograph record form have revolutionized the teaching of Shakespeare in certain forward looking schools. In 1942, Mr. Welles presented the school with two-year scholarships to provide all expenses for five boys to be nominated from the public schools of the nation by their principals,—the final choice being Mr. Hill's. Most of the boys at Todd naturally come from around Chicago, though half the states in the Union and many foreign countries are represented. With Tosebo, the affiliated summer camp, boys can be cared for all the year. See page 840.

This oldest Church school west of the Alleghenies is also the oldest non-proprietary boys school in the region. Shattuck, too, was the first private preparatory school to which a regular army officer was detailed by the government, by which it is classed as an 'essentially military school'. During its long career more than three thousand boys, largely from well-to-do families of the northwest, have been prepared for colleges, east and west. Shattuck was the conception of Bishop Whipple who, familiar with such schools in England as Winchester and Rugby, took over a little day school opened in 1858 by the Rev. James L. Breck and named it for Dr. George Cheyne Shattuck of Boston. During the long period from 1867 to 1915 the Rev. James Dobbin was rector. The Rt. Rev. F. A. McElwain, Bishop of Minnesota, has been rector since 1916. Dr. C. W. Newhall, connected with the school for forty years and head master for twenty, was succeeded in 1936 by James S. Guernsey. Following his resignation in 1940, Dr. Henning, former rector of Christ Church, St. Paul, was made rector, and H. R. Drummond, assistant head master of Shattuck, 1922-1936, was recalled from Northwestern Military and Naval Academy to act as principal. Dr. Henning is now on military leave and Dr. Pletcher, principal since 1942, is in temporary charge. See page 844.

Originally Minnesota Academy, gifts from the great flour merchant resulted in the adoption in 1886 of the present name. The school was affiliated with Carleton College from 1916 to 1935, and since 1920 has enrolled only boys in its boarding department. Military drill in uniforms is part of the required physical training. Milo B. Price, principal from 1904 until 1931, resumed his post in 1935 on the resignation of Delmar F. Sisson, retiring again in 1939.

On a series of terraces rising from the east bank of the Mississippi, the capital of Minnesota is the smaller of the Twin Cities. Second only to Chicago as a livestock and meat packing center, it is also important for its manufactures. In the black marble and gold leaf lobby of the modern court house stands the thirty-seven foot Indian chieftain carved by the Swedish sculptor, Carl Milles, out of fifty-five tons of translucent Mexican onyx. A skyscraper bank building, a municipal auditorium, a hospital and a boulevard named in honor of Frank B. Kellogg are other civic improvements. The academy has two sites—the Country

Day School, west of Snelling, and the Lower School in a modern building at 718 Portland Avenue.

Essentially a college preparatory school, Saint Paul Academy from 1916 to 1941 sent every graduate on to some reputable college, eighty per cent to Harvard, Yale or Princeton. Nearly a third have graduated from college with honors. Unusual among day schools, the boys wear uniforms and devote one period a day to military drill. The academy grew out of a small day school conducted by C. N. B. Wheeler who remained on the faculty for forty years, retiring in 1940, and F. W. Fiske, who died in 1934. Mr Briggs, after successful experience at The Hill and the Country Day School of Kansas City, has been at Saint Paul for over a quarter of a century. Able and scholarly, son of Dean Briggs of Harvard, he has been not only head but business manager since the academy's incorporation and reorganization in 1914.

At the meeting of waterways and transportation routes, eighth in population, St. Louis is the most centrally located of our great cities. Growing pains and a crude culture, softened by a music loving German element, have manifested themselves in scandalous political situations and spasmodic reforms. Currently the smoke from the soft coal universally used has been controlled as has the Mississippi, whose mud and flood drove well-to-do residents and the private schools that served them out into the suburbs. The city has numerous Catholic schools and colleges. About Forest Park, site of the Exposition of 1904, has developed an educational center. To the west in the Wydown section is Washington University, founded in 1853. St. Louis University, Catholic, includes some women's colleges dating from 1818. The Principia, in the northwestern district has built its college section up the river in Elsah, Ill. Most successful of the many schools for Christian Scientists that have been started in various parts of the country, The Principia is the only educational institution for the sons and daughters of Christian Scientists that offers work from nursery school through four years of college. Mrs. Mary Kimball Morgan, the founder, now chairman of the board, with her sons continues in control. There is no direct connection with or financial support from the Christian Science Church, but Christian Science practices, ideals and standards prevail among faculty and students. In consonance with these standards, team work between trustees, school executives and patrons is played up, and personalities are submerged. However, it is apparent even to some Christian Scientists that the school owes its great success to the organizing genius and vision of the present president, in charge since 1920. Since 1935 the college group has occupied new buildings on a four mile tract of land on the Mississippi near the village of Elsah, Ill. See page 914.

With its mint, hospital, bombing fields, army air school, gunnery, engineering offices of the U. S. Reclamation Service, and administrative offices, Denver is the second city in the country in its number of government buildings. Evidence of its colorful early mining days are fading. Kent, Graland, and Randell Schools are in the city. Colorado Woman's College is in the Park Hill residential section, and on the outskirts Colorado Military School is near the University of Denver. Seven miles outside the city limits are Loretto Heights College and its Pancratia Hall.

The popularity of the southwest as a winter playground has brought many changes to Tucson, though it remains the center for the gold, silver and copper mines and a considerable traffic across the border. In the state it is second only to Phoenix in size and importance. Ranch schools attracting well-to-do patrons from the north, the east, and the Pacific coast sprang up roundabout in great numbers during the thirties, but many were discontinued in 1942-43. The University of Arizona was established here in 1855. Five miles from the city is the Potter School. On the Circle Double A Ranch, nine miles north of the city is Green Fields Preparatory School. Three miles further into the mountains, Southern Arizona School for Boys borders on the Coronado National Forest. The Russell Ranch School moved from Oracle Road to its new buildings in 1940. This only accredited junior college for women in Oregon traces its origin to a pioneer institution founded by the Episcopal Church in 1861, two years after the admission of Oregon to statehood. The school was formally opened eight years later by the Rt. Rev. B. Wistar Morris and his sisters-in-law, the Misses Rodney. Mary B. Rodney came from St. Mary's Hall, New Jersey, to be first head mistress. Since 1904 the school has been directed by the Episcopal sisters of St. John the Baptist. Now progressive in outlook, with college trained teachers, it sends most of its graduates on to college, some to its own junior college organized in 1932. A three year nursing curriculum in cooperation with the Good Samaritan Hospital is offered.

One of the four schools on the coast early preeminent, it was established by Miss Head and handed on by her to her disciple, head of the English department, Mary E. Wilson. A westerner, in her thirty years as principal she impressed on her girls something of her own warmth and breadth of vision. Here two world tennis champions had their schooling. Mr. and Mrs. Hyde, eminently fitted for the work through their association with leading schools east and west, together with ability and personality, took over the direction in 1938. The creation of Mr. Webb, this well established preparatory school each year sends many boys on to western colleges and universities and a number to the large eastern colleges. Mr. Webb here carries on the traditions of his family, known in the south as educators for more than seventy years through their school in Bell Buckle, Tenn. As a rancher in California from 1911 to 1918, Mr. Webb became acquainted with Sherman Day Thacher who pointed out to him the need for more boys' schools of good standards in the region, and suggested that he establish one. Returning to Tennessee, Mr. Webb prepared himself to start such an institution by teaching at his father's school, of which he was a graduate. Open-minded, alert to the needs of his boys, he has been eminently successful, attracting families of discrimination from all parts of the country. He has played a responsible part in attempts to stabilize academic and professional standards among private schools of the region, notably in the recently formed California Association of Independent Secondary Schools. LOS ANGELES, CALIF. Pop 1,238,048 (1930) 1,504,277 (1940).

One of the world's most astonishing recent growths, fifth city in the world's most wonderful country, within the memory of many now living it was a dusty Mexican town of 20,000. Huxley, the English novelist, who came just before the war for an eye cure, remained to write a picture of its almost occult culture. Los Angeles is a hotbed of isms and ologies.

On its seven million dollar city hall the city council had chiseled in 1940, "The immemorial migrations and commingling of peoples is the root flowering in the highest that man has become." Its standards, intellectual, moral and religious, were set by the early migrants from the Bible Belt and retired Iowa farmers whose bright perennial heroine is Aimee Semple McPherson. The outdoor life and climatic influences, the variety of foods, have brought about the development here of a physically advanced race of young athletes. The city embraces a great area from the San Fernando valley, over the Hollywood hills and the Santa Monica mountains, to the sea.

The original Mexican settlement, midway between the mountains and the ocean, centered about Olvera Street. Here still stands the Church of Our Lady Queen of the Angels, dating from 1818. The discovery of oil, the development of harbor facilities, the cinema and the airplane have made the city a great center of industry and commerce. War and the air craft industry have brought an influx of labor and given occupation to the once unwelcome Okies. Thousands of Japs have been forced into the interior. Some of the schools maintain standards that have set the pace for the public schools which have reached a high degree of efficiency. But private schools spring up like mushrooms and to maintain standards various attempts to form approving and accrediting associations have been made to protect the reputable schools and private school patrons.

The secretarial, trade and industrial schools are still in the business section. South, in the vicinity of Exposition Park with its stadium seating 90,000, is the University of Southern California. Preparatory schools are found in all the residential regions, but few remain in the tree-lined old residential parts to the southwest. Near Westlake Park, four miles west of Broadway, is Otis Art Institute. Page and Marlborough Schools, once in open country, are now surrounded by city blocks. In Hollywood, Black-Foxe occupies the former buildings of the Urban Military Academy, and in North Hollywood is the new plant of Harvard School. To the west, a group of schools has developed midway between Los Angeles and Santa Monica Bay,—in the Holmby Hills, Westlake and its Holmby Junior College which moved from the city in 1928; the frowning red brick buildings of the University of California at Los Angeles; and the imposing Catholic institutions, Marymount for girls, and St. Mary's College for men. There has always been something of the east about California Preparatory School. Mrs. J. H. Henry, a New England woman, established for her son's education the Pasadena Military School. His efforts were recognized in 1941 by his appointment as first recording secretary of the California Association of Independent Secondary Schools. Thacher long stood alone among boys schools in California preparing for eastern colleges. In "Sherman Thacher and his School," by LeRoy McKim Makepeace, Yale University Press, 1941, a vivid picture is given of the father of the present head who, in the late eighties, after failure in business and as a lawyer moved to Ojai with an invalid younger brother who needed a warm climate, set out an orange orchard, and took a few boys to tutor. Here he was shortly joined by his brother William Larned Thacher. The school soon became known among eastern families for its interesting outdoor life and success in getting boys into the large eastern universities. Not all graduates go on to eastern colleges, but all are given the preparation they demand. A picture of the school in its various stages of development is given by the five semi-centennial publications, one for each decade, the last, 1939, a reproduction of Fortune of which an old Thacher boy is one of the editors. The horses that the boys own and care for, the trails that run from the school to the canyons where Thacher boys build their weekend cabins, are apparent as the center of the life of the school today as in the past. Mr. Thacher died in 1931 and his second son assumed full responsibility in 1936. See page 849.

Many extra-curricular activities, music, art, dramatics, photography, enrich the lives of the girls in this excellent preparatory school. All are prepared for college and a number of electives are open to girls not restricted by college entrance examinations. A warm and friendly atmosphere is fostered, and today girls help with household chores and work about the grounds. Miss Branson in 1920 reorganized the Girls' School established in San Rafael, gave it her name, and moved it to Ross in 1922. See pages 849 and 879.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF. Pop 634,394 (1930) 634,536 (1940).

The local flavor of San Francisco, the pride of its people, has withstood time, earthquake, fire and Treasure Island. Two great bridges stand as monuments to the success of its citizens in wangling from a beneficent Government the greatest per capita largesse. The long one speeds traffic from the mainland; the other makes accessible the erstwhile secluded region of country estates in Marin County. San Francisco today is still the quintessence of California and the golden west. Built on the sand dunes at the tip of the peninsula bounded by the Pacific, the Golden Gate and the Bay, its street cars must be hauled up the hill by cable. The Presidio, famous Mexican and United States military headquarters, today a hive of war activity, faces the Golden Gate. Golden Gate Park, reaching to the Pacific, is unique among parks. The Chinese element has long made San Francisco's Chinatown famous. Almost equally well known is the colorful Italian colony.

SCHOOLS CLASSIFIED BY TYPE TO MEET SPECIAL NEEDS

EXPLANATORY NOTE

These lists are planned to help parents and educational advisers find schools to meet individual requirements. There is no attempt to make these lists exhaustive but in general they include the more important schools of each type.

So far as can be, in these chaotic times, representative schools,—boys, girls, coeducational, junior college, and professional and vocational,—described in the main body of the book, pages 129-592,—are here further classified as to type (elementary, military, finishing); rate (under $500, $500-$800); special characteristics (five day boarding, country day, progressive); courses emphasized (music, business); physical features (on salt water, at high altitude, ranch); etc.

So many changes have been made this year in the schools,—new work undertaken, usual courses discarded, summer sessions inaugurated, policies changing from month to month,—and so many school men and women have been drawn into government and war work of one kind or another, that these lists are not to be implicitly relied on either as to courses offered or name of head. For the latest information available at the date of publication we would refer you to the school notices in the critical descriptive text, to the schools own Announcements in the Illustrated section, to the Index of Schools and to the chapter War Activities in the introductory matter.

A list of these Classifications will be found in the Table of Contents.

SPECIAL SCHOOLS

Defectives received no scientific care and education in this country until 1820 when idiots were admitted to the deaf and dumb asylum at Hartford, Connecticut Dr. Edouard Seguin, a young French physician, developed a method of training of the sense organs and in 1850 opened the Seguin Physiological School at Orange, New Jersey. Before that, however, his methods had been used in the first strictly private institution in the country, Elm Hall, Barre, Massachusetts, which dates back to 1848 More recently schools for the slightly deficient have developed and many of these admit no low grade defectives

SECTARIAN BOARDING SCHOOLS

Up to the turn of the century, most of the private schools were closely allied with various denominations and received their support and patronage. Today, of the Protestant schools, only the Episcopal have in general retained this close contact. No attempt is here made to list the Catholic schools, the more important of which are described in the critical text. The following lists include schools that claim denominational allegiance and support.

PROFESSIONAL AND VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS

SCHOOLS OF MUSIC

The conservatory system was established as early as 1853 by Eben Tourjee. Harvard was the first college to establish a music department—1862. Now almost every college and preparatory school has its department of music,—more or less upset by current conditions. Some representative boys, girls and co-educational preparatory schools and junior colleges with well organized music departments are listed among Schools Classified by Type pp 671-758. The schools listed are for special musical training.

SCHOOLS OF FINE AND APPLIED ART

The study of art as an accomplishment for young ladies was an early 19th century development. As early as 1791 Charles Willson Peale endeavored to create a school of art in Philadelphia. The attempt, though unsuccessful, led in 1805 to the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts. Summer art schools, a popular recent development, are not so numerous in 1943. Secondary schools and junior colleges giving more than passing attention to the arts are under their respective classifications in this section.

KINDERGARTEN PRIMARY TRAINING SCHOOLS

The first kindergarten for English speaking children was started in Boston by Elizabeth P. Peabody in 1860. The first in this country was conducted in German by Mrs. Carl Schurz in her home in Watertown, Wisconsin. The first kindergarten training school was organized in Boston in 1868 by Madame Matilde Kriege and her daughter. Miss Marie Boelte opened a similar school in New York City four years later. Today, with public school enrollment down and budgets decreased, enrollment in schools training teachers of pre-school children is smaller.

SCHOOLS OF HOUSEHOLD ART

This oldest of the arts was one of the latest to acquire classrooms and methods. Comenius and Luther emphasized the educational value of household activities, and the early charity schools in England gave their girls some training. But it was the middle of the 19th century before actual recognition of the educative possibilities in the home arts was given in Europe. In the United States, Catharine Beecher published in 1840 "A Treatise on Domestic Economy." Today, with the emphasis on making women self-sufficient, opportunities in high schools and preparatory schools for girls to dabble in cookery have increased. Domestic science departments are maintained in many universities. Here are listed under various classifications specialized schools, not of secondary rank and not departments of four year colleges. Preparatory schools and junior colleges with departments of the household arts will be found classified earlier in this section.

BUSINESS AND SECRETARIAL SCHOOLS

Private business classes existed even in Colonial times. In the '30's and '40's of the last century private classes in bookkeeping increased rapidly, forerunners of the modern business schools. In the '50's and '60's chain schools were established, remnants of which exist today independently in many cities under the old names. Business departments of standard colleges and private secondary schools are not included in this list.

SUPPLEMENTARY LISTS
SCHOOLS AND JUNIOR COLLEGES

NOT INCLUDED IN THE PRECEDING PAGES

EXPLANATORY NOTE

These schools and junior colleges not described in the preceding pages are here classified as to type, —Secondary Boarding, Junior College, Local Day, Tutoring, etc., arranged alphabetically by towns in each state from Maine to California. A complete list of the classifications will be found in Table of Contents.

Included are schools on which we have inadequate information or from which we have had no recent report, and schools of lesser importance or of largely local patronage.

Though many of these schools may be now closed or may not reopen in the fall of 1943, we hesitate to eliminate such institutions until we have actual notification that they have been closed. If mail has not been returned the school is still included. Fuller data on many of them will be found in previous editions.

Because of the uncertainty of the continuance of many of the schools in this section they are not, as in former editions, included in the Index of Schools at the end of the book.

Addenda give such information as has been sent us recently relative to schools which were not included in the 26th edition, as well as recent changes.

ADDENDA

These schools not included in the 26th edition have been reported to us as in operation 1942-43. Here too are included changes of which we have recently been notified in schools in the following Supplementary Lists. These are classified under the headings as they appear in the Supplementary Lists, e g. Secondary Schools, Tutoring Schools, Elementary Day Schools, etc.

TUTORING SCHOOLS

Tutoring schools in college towns continue to flourish in spite of disapprobation of the authorities. Emphasis on individual instruction in regulation 'prep' schools during the last two decades has cut the number and enrollment of the college preparatory tutoring schools. Some of the survivors not elsewhere included in this Handbook are here listed.

KINDERGARTEN-PRIMARY SCHOOLS

The private kindergarten has assumed less importance in many communities since the advent of the newer nursery school which takes children as young as one year and keeps them until they are ready for the first grade. Here, however, are listed a few conventional kindergarten-primary schools enrolling children from four to about eight years.

MUSIC SCHOOLS

With the increased interest in music in the public schools, the formation of orchestras, and the promotion of inter-school and regional musical contests with the nation-wide broadcasts of the successful contestants, the number of children taking music lessons has increased. But many of the 17,000 music schools listed in 1929 have faded, for the orchestra or band leader in the school frequently "teaches" all the instruments. The demand for degrees has caused many music schools to apply for degree granting charters. Others have affiliated themselves with nearby colleges or universities. The major colleges, according to a bulletin recently published by the U. S. Department of Interior show an increase in music majors of over 100% from 1928 to 1935.

SCHOOLS OF EXPRESSION, THEATRE, DANCE

As the drama grew out of the dance and as both tend to agglomerate today, no attempt is made here to distinguish one type from the other. The School of the Dance, in which in the early '30's thousands of women cavorted in bits of gauze, today takes a less sentimental turn and robes its pupils in abbreviated shirts and shorts. The schools of elocution and oratory that flourished in the early 1900's have become schools of expression and schools of the theatre, their courses largely reorganized to prepare for the microphone and stage.

SCHOOLS OF PHYSICAL EDUCATION

With public school insistence on college degrees for its teachers and supervisors of specialized subjects, most of the schools of physical education have in the last decade become four year degree granting institutions. Only a few schools of fencing and specialized training still function independently.

KINDERGARTEN-PRIMARY TRAINING SCHOOLS

The kindergarten, the first progressive innovation in our perfectly Prussianized school system, also came from Germany. Modern progressive methods in the teaching of young children, resulting in the nursery school and the activity school, have made the orthodox Froebelian method archaic, so most of the old-line kindergarten training schools have passed.

BUSINESS SCHOOLS

Practically every public high school offers some business courses but there are still thousands of private so-called business colleges, some operating in one crowded city office room. Only about 600 of these answered a recent questionnaire of the U. S. Department of the Interior. A national association has done something to set up standards for the larger of these private institutions. Among the schools that furnish us with information, the more important are listed elsewhere in the book. Here are others, smaller or about which we have less data. Many will close from lack of enrollment during war time.

CANADIAN SCHOOLS ACCEPTING BOYS AND GIRLS FROM THE U. S.

The excellent scholastic standing and low rate of Canadian schools have long attracted students from the States. Even in war time some of these have indicated interest in enrolling Americans. Fuller information with illustrated announcements of some will be found in the "Brief School Guide," 1937.

EDUCATIONAL ASSOCIATIONS
MEMBERSHIP LISTS

School and College members of some Educational Associations of national scope are here included as of interest to parents and those who advise about schools.

Addenda show recent additions to membership lists, and removals in 1943 from the 1942 lists, insofar as they have been reported to us.

A list of these Associations will be found in the Table of Contents.

THE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITIES

The Association of American Universities is currently composed of 34 institutions with large graduate schools, the most recently elected, the University of Rochester. In 1941 this association set its stamp of approval on 281 colleges. Success in stimulating scholarly interest in students and in preparing them for more advanced scholarly endeavor is important among its criteria.

Officers, 1941—President, University of California; Vice-President, Duke University; Secretary, Dean E. B. Stouffer, University of Kansas, Lawrence, Kansas.

SUPPLEMENTARY NOTE

Membership in Associations

There are normally many changes in the memberships each year in all these educational associations.

With the closing of so many schools and colleges, the taking over of others by the government, and the enlistment of school and college heads in various government or military services, such changes at this time naturally will be more numerous than in ordinary years.

These lists therefore, should not be taken as finally authoritative without the latest information from the secretary of the association. This will be particularly true of the Secondary Education Board.

ILLUSTRATED ANNOUNCEMENTS

The schools here included (pp. 792-914) make a distinguished group. The invitation to this section is not extended to all, and all that are invited do not accept.

These are the schools' own statements, written or approved by them and illustrated with photographs they supply. This year special courses and activities connected with or influenced by the war are described in considerable detail by many schools.

In the critical text section (pp. 131-592) a bold face cross reference at the end of the descriptive notice of each of these schools refers to this fuller statement. Most of them will be found further classified in the various lists of Schools to Meet Special Needs (pp. 597-666).

Boys, girls, and coeducational preparatory and elementary schools, junior colleges, and schools for specialized training are grouped together in geographical proximity to facilitate comparison.

Parents and school advisers will find it interesting and illuminating to thumb these illustrated pages in a preliminary survey of school opportunities available in various regions.

WASSOOKEAG SCHOOL, Bryant Hill, Dexter, Me.
LLOYD HARVEY HATCH, Head Master.

The peace-time program developed at the School and the School-Camp has continued the year round since 1928. Flexible in methods and structure, it has become a pattern for war, and the current expansion of the accelerated idea in school and college indicates that the "year-round" system will influence the educational design of the future. By beginning with the freshman or sophomore year, schoolboys save a year without sacrificing sound standards. Separate campuses for summer and winter.

THE NEWTON SCHOOL, South Windham, Vt.
DAVID NEWTON, A.B., Head Master.

On a 275 acre hillside farm this small school offers sound and adequate college preparation but welcomes also boys intelligently indifferent to college. In place of entrance examinations all candidates spend a week or so at the school before enrolling, to be sure they are suited to the life.

Responsibility and dependability are developed through varied supervised jobs for all students. They handle the horses, cows, chickens; provide all fuel, pack ice, help slaughter; do the lumbering, building, shop and forge work. Students must study the Bible, keep good accounts, and, unless real monotones, sing in the choir. Available each year are four scholarships.

BULFINCH HALL (1818)

PHILLIPS ACADEMY, Andover, Massachusetts.

CLAUDE M. FUESS, Ph.D., Litt.D., L.H.D., Head Master

Phillips Academy, founded in 1778 by members of the Phillips family, is the oldest incorporated academy in the U. S.

It is international in its representation and democratic in its life and spirit. Its essential appeal is to students of serious educational purpose and high moral standards.

To be eligible for entrance, candidates must present satisfactory school records and evidence of good character, and must take examinations for assignment to classes.

Dormitory accommodations and supervision enable students to pass by gradual and natural stages from the paternalism of home life to the freedom of college. Classroom sections are small, and there is one teacher to every nine boys.

Williams Hall and Rockwell House, with their close supervision, offer attractive and helpful surroundings to the young boy just leaving home for his school career.

The latest additions to the school plant, designed by Guy Lowell and Charles A. Platt, include a recitation building, dormitories, a library, an art gallery, a hospital, a church, an auditorium and administration building, and an inn.

Extensive playgrounds and athletic fields are available for the use of students. All the boys are required to take regular gymnasium work or engage in sports. The Gymnasium, the Swimming Pool, and the Case Memorial Building, providing complete facilities for athletic activities during the winter, are in charge of a physical director and several assistants.

Endowments and scholarship funds are available, providing pecuniary aid for more than a hundred scholarly and ambitious boys of limited means.

EMERSON SCHOOL FOR BOYS, Exeter, N. H.

EDWARD E. EMERSON, A.B., Head Master.

The Emerson School for Boys 8-16 has a course of study beginning with the third grade. Thorough preparation is offered for the first or second years of Exeter, Andover, and other leading Secondary Schools. While the majority of the graduates go to Phillips Exeter Academy, many alumni have entered various other well-known preparatory schools. The curriculum is based on the requirements of the Secondary Education Board.

The location is in the historic school town of Exeter, N. H. There is direct train service from Boston, 50 miles distant.

A major aim of the school is to provide a happy and homelike atmosphere for younger boys while they are receiving sound scholastic training. Boys are closely supervised in respect to their studies, health, character training, and sports. The classes average about nine students in each. A tradition of the school is the close comradeship between the masters and the boys.

The school equipment includes spacious houses of Colonial design, a new annex, and a 12-acre Athletic Field. Sports include football, soccer, boxing, baseball, and tennis. Winter Sports are especially popular, in a climate well suited for them. A daily program of calisthenics to promote physical welfare is held. Coached athletics are available for all boys. There is a wide range of opportunities for hobbies and extra-curriculum activities.

THE CLARK SCHOOL, Hanover, New Hampshire.

CLIFFORD PEASE CLARK, Ph.D., Founder.

FRANK MILLETT MORGAN, Ph.D., Head Master.

Clark school is operating on an accelerated program of three semesters to the school year. This makes it possible for a student entering as a Freshman to complete his four years of preparatory work in three.

Upper classmen may also save time in preparing for college and thus enter college before being subject to the draft.

The school is maintaining its high standards of instruction and inculcating in each boy those basic principles and high ideals which tend toward the development of manly character.

In addition to the regular college preparatory subjects the school offers courses in advanced mathematics, navigation, radio, and meteorology.

With enrollment limited to eighty and an average of six students to a class, individual attention is assured. The Instructors, specialists in their subjects, are chosen for fitness to lead young men as well as for scholastic ability.

Under the supervision of the Athletic Director every student takes daily exercise. The School is represented in Football, Basketball, Baseball, Hockey, Golf, Tennis, and Winter Sports.

Proximity to Dartmouth College affords opportunity for the activities of a college community.

HOLDERNESS SCHOOL, Plymouth, N. H.REV. EDRIC AMORY WELD, Rector.

Holderness School offers a program designed to prepare boys physically, intellectually, and through cooperative living, to give the maximum service to their country. The regular course gives a thorough foundation in English, Mathematics and Science, and provides the approach through History, Sociology and Geography for a sympathetic understanding of the problems of world reconstruction. Special pre-induction courses are optional.

Besides physical conditioning exercises there are all team-sports, and the country is especially good for skiing. As part of the "self help" program, all boys have jobs which change weekly. Small classes mean close association with the faculty.

PROCTOR ACADEMY, Andover, N. H.J. HALSEY GULICK, Head Master.

Besides the fully accredited College Preparatory Course, the Academy features for those not going to college a varied curriculum designed to develop latent capacities.

Older boys may take a Ground School Course, under the direction of the head master, an experienced flyer, and Flying Lessons at a nearby Airport.

The Academy is limited to fifty boys which assures small classes and individual work. There is an intimate relation between the masters and boys, not only in the class room, but in all phases of the school life.

Besides the regular seasonal sports, sailing is offered and many of the boys build their own boats. During the winter months the school is particularly known for its skiing.

NEW HAMPTON SCHOOL FOR BOYS,
New Hampton, New Hampshire.

FREDERICK SMITH, A.M., Head Master.

Under normal conditions, New Hampton graduates enter some twenty different colleges each year. Emphasis on thoroughness and a genuine interest in the welfare of each boy have produced excellent college preparatory results. These same factors have also effected a quick adjustment to the demands of the war.

Summer sessions permit boys to accelerate their courses in order to graduate at seventeen or younger. Physics, Mathematics, English, Aeronautics, Physical Fitness receive new emphasis.

VERMONT ACADEMY, Saxtons River, Vermont.

LAURENCE G. LEAVITT, B.S., A.M., Head Master.

Vermont Academy is a college preparatory school with a curriculum adjusted to war-time demands. Traditional courses in Languages, Science, Mathematics, Government are supplemented by pre-flight Aeronautics, War Photography, Riflery, Seamanship, First Aid.

The life of the school is designed to prepare the boy on graduation to hold his own as a responsible member of society, in college, or in the armed forces.

The 11 buildings and 36-acre campus provide for many Activities and Sports. Skiing is emphasized. The study of Music and Dramatics is encouraged, and a School Paper is published. The social life is simple and friendly.

Write Mr. Sargent, 11 Beacon Street, Boston

MOUNT HERMON SCHOOL, Mount Hermon, Mass.
DAVID R. PORTER, M.A., L.H.D., Head Master.

Student participation in work of both School and Farm, with endowment and annual gifts, makes it possible to offer earnest Boys exceptional opportunity for College Preparation at low rate. Recently upwards of 80% have entered College.

Extra-curricular interests and activities supplement the regular curriculum. Every Boy is urged to participate in a comprehensive plan of intramural Sports in addition to an inter-scholastic sports program. (See also page 851.)

THE HUNTINGTON SCHOOL FOR BOYS,
320 Huntington Ave., Boston, Massachusetts.
CHARLES H. SAMPSON, B.S., Ed.M., Head Master.

A well-equipped Independent Day School of the conservatively progressive type, the student body is divided into four forms beginning with the ninth grade. Boys are thoroughly prepared for the leading colleges in New England and throughout the country. The School is fully accredited and boys enrolled in it will find the opportunity to be adequately prepared, under experienced teachers, to meet any college entrance situation.

The equipment includes Classrooms of standard size, Science Laboratories, Gymnasium with three Basketball Courts, Swimming Pool, Running Track, Bowling Alleys, and six acres of Playing Fields. Boys have the use of an excellent library.

In the co-educational Summer Session (established in 1912) intensive preparation by regular staff members is offered in grammar and high school subjects. Some boys can by attending the summer session and the first semester of 1943-44 earn the needed units for entrance to college in February 1944 and at the same time a Huntington School diploma. In 1943-44 special courses will be offered in Practical Mathematics, Drafting, Electricity and Physics particularly related to Aeronautics. Saturday morning courses (co-educational) will also be offered.

WILLISTON ACADEMY, Easthampton, Mass.ARCHIBALD V. GALBRAITH, Head Master.

Williston was founded in 1841. During its hundred years it has sent thousands of students to college, well prepared to cope successfully with the problems of college life. Today it stands as one of the few well-endowed New England Schools maintaining the high college preparatory standards now urged by the Armed Forces. A newly-established summer session, covering the work of a half year, permits earlier graduation.

Williston is located on the college Highway, fifteen miles north of Springfield. Noteworthy among its equipment is the new Recreation Center, with rooms devoted to student activities, the gymnasium, and an excellent swimming pool.

The atmosphere of Williston is wholesome, democratic, and sincere. The School encourages hard work and fair play. Of utmost importance are the experience and ability of masters devoted to the best interests of the boys under them.

Scholarship aid is awarded on the basis of need, character, and high standing.

GOVERNOR DUMMER ACADEMY,
 South Byfield, Massachusetts.
EDWARD W. EAMES, M.A., Head Master.

The oldest boarding school for boys in the United States, Governor Dummer is in the North Shore country, thirty miles north of Boston. There it retains much of the charm and tradition of New England.

A high ratio of masters to students makes for a friendly, homelike life and personal attention to each boy. Stressing hard work and high scholarship, the school has a national patronage. Most of the boys enter the leading colleges and universities of the East.

The oil painting of Lieutenant-Governor William Dummer of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, here reproduced, hangs in the Mansion House which he built, now occupied by the head master.

MONSON ACADEMY, Monson, Massachusetts.
GEORGE E. ROGERS, A.B., Head Master.

For one hundred thirty-nine years Monson has provided thorough preparation for college and for life, its program being adapted to the special needs of each boy. The enrollment is limited to seventy boys, almost all of whom enter college, by certificate or by entrance examinations.

Monson features unusually small classes, personal attention, and a homelike atmosphere in a typical, small New England town, 75 miles west of Boston.

The broad program of extracurricular activities is supervised entirely by faculty members, all of whom are in residence at the school, and whose personal interest it is to prepare each boy for success in college or in business.

DEERFIELD ACADEMY, Deerfield, Massachusetts.
FRANK L. BOYDEN, Amherst; Ped.D., LL.D., Director.

Deerfield, founded in 1797, is one of the leading Schools for boys. Several of its buildings date from Pre-Revolutionary days. Its ideals are true to the old traditions of scholarship and moral training, but the Academy of today is thoroughly modernized and completely in touch with the life of the times.

The four year Course of Study corresponds to that of the senior high school, and prepares students for any College or University. The School Certificate is accepted by all Colleges admitting without examination. The Boarding Department is exclusively for boys.

Dormitories are splendidly equipped, as are the recently completed Science and Academy Buildings and the Gymnasium.

Fields, hills, and streams are part of the School Campus, and each student participates in some form of daily athletic exercise and sport,—Baseball, Hockey, Football, Tennis or Basketball.

Glee Club and Dramatics are popular extra-curricular activities. Each year members of the Senior Class present a Shakespearean comedy as part of the regular Commencement exercises.

A Deerfield boy is offered thorough College Preparation and a wholesome social life with his fellows.

ALBERT KEEP, A.B., M.A., Head Master.

Now offering an accelerated, streamlined program with four ten-week terms in each calendar year, Berkshire continues its tradition of careful consideration of the individual needs of its students. Boys may do four years work in three, to complete their preparatory work before entering the armed forces; courses may be reviewed with loss of only a term, not a year as formerly; and the average student may continue the customary long summer vacation if it seems advisable.

An Aeronautics course helps boys to qualify for commissions in Army, Navy, and Marines, and gives them the training in safe flying that will be needed in peace time. Flight Training in a nearby accredited flying school is given in a C.A.A. "controlled" course similar to the elementary course required of Army and Navy flying cadets. It is spread over thirty weeks to permit of greater care and thoroughness. Ground School Training, under members of the staff who have trained Army Air Cadets, gives intensive work in science, mathematics, navigation, gasoline motors, radio and meteorology which equips students for any branch of the service they may wish to enter.

The school occupies an estate of 350 acres, four miles from Sheffield at an elevation of 900 ft. on the eastern slope of Mt. Everett. Opportunity is given to every boy to take part in some sport, competitive or otherwise, best suited to his physical development and interest. Skiing and outing club activities have been part of the Berkshire scene for thirty years.

The sports include football, hockey, baseball, soccer, track, tennis and basketball. Unless excused by the school physician, each boy is required to participate daily in vigorous exercise.

Scholarships in limited number are awarded yearly to deserving students.

HART FESSENDEN, M.A., Head Master.

Since 1903 The Fessenden School has prepared boys for the secondary schools. Its purpose is to build in, at an early age, habits of good work and square play and responsible citizenship that will carry over to the years ahead. Its educational policy rests on the theory of small classes and graded divisions, so that a boy, with others of like attainment, can progress without boredom or discouragement at his own best rate. A large and experienced faculty makes it possible for the masters to concern themselves with each separate boy. One member of the faculty, with long training in this important field, devotes all her time to remedial work in reading and spelling. Music, art, manual training, and current events are part of the regular curriculum. Extra-curriculum activities include the dramatic club, the glee club, the press, science, and electric train clubs, and the machine shop.

In their athletics, as well as in their studies, the boys have the encouragement of working with others of their own group. There are five squads in football and baseball; soccer for those who prefer it; junior and senior golf and tennis tournaments; basketball, squash, wrestling, and boxing in the gymnasium; hockey and roller skating on the rinks; coasting and skiing on the hill. The boys must take part in some form of athletics, and the manner of their playing is considered as important as their skill.

The health routine is under the direction of an eminent Boston pediatrician.

Within ten miles of Boston, the school is easily accessible, and parents and friends of the boys are always welcome. The property includes forty acres of land and is on a hill overlooking the Albemarle golf course.

This year there are in the school 10 sons of old boys, 67 brothers of boys in the school or of alumni, 23 other sorts of relatives, and 22 sons or grandsons of camp, school, or college people.

EAGLEBROOK SCHOOL, Deerfield, Massachusetts.C. THURSTON CHASE, Jr., A.B., Head Master.

Eaglebrook boys enjoy a safe, normal, and wholesome life on a secluded mountain-side overlooking historic Old Deerfield. The School is easily accessible to parents and friends of students by main railroad and motor routes, and their visits are welcomed.

The setting provides opportunity for a wide variety of sports, woodcraft, nature study, and constructive work which strengthens its students for eager participation in today's world.

Eaglebrook boys receive expert academic preparation for the leading secondary schools, and an unusually large Faculty assist the Head Master in a sympathetic study and guidance of each boy's potentialities and development. The School feels strongly its responsibility to develop realistic, rugged boys with understanding and faith in the American tradition.

The Lower School—first six grades—enjoys a separate school building. The new main School House is devoted to grades seven, eight, and nine. Extra curricular activities include music (piano, instrumental, band, orchestra, singing); arts and crafts, dancing; first aid; science; journalism; library work; photography, mechanics; navigation, and other constructive hobbies. The Town Council, The Hearth, School Bank, School Store, and work projects contribute to development of character and personality.

Physical development and medical care are provided for by a Resident Physician, two resident nurses, and modern medical facilities of the completely-equipped Allen-Chase Infirmary.

FAY SCHOOL, Southborough, Massachusetts.

HARRISON L. REINKE, A.B., A.M. Head Master.

Fay School, the oldest elementary boarding school in the United States, is also in a sense the newest. It is the purpose of the head master and the faculty to keep the School, once a pioneer of its kind, always in the fore-front of American education. "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good" is a saying which guides the life of the School now and which will take on newer and larger meaning in the future.

With a beautiful and fully-equipped physical plant, an experienced and skillful faculty, and a vital tradition, the School is primarily dedicated to the task of preparing young boys to furnish leadership for the country of tomorrow. Between the ages of seven and fourteen the foundations of character can best be laid. Character, rather than technical or vocational skills, will be the quality most useful to America when the war is over and the peace remains to be won.

While preparing its boys for the curricula of the leading secondary schools, the School teaches them to think for themselves. Sports and outdoor activities of all kinds have as their chief aim the physical development of individuals. A program of manual work in which all the boys take part develops personal independence and a sense of responsibility; and things of the spirit are made meaningful even to the youngest by being put into terms which they can comprehend and appreciate. The School's motto is "Poteris modo velis," which can perhaps be freely translated as "You can do as much as you are determined to do."

MANTER HALL SCHOOL, 71 Mt. Auburn at

JOHN C. HALL, Head Master.

Founded in 1886 by William Whiting Nolen, well known to many generations of Harvard men for his efficient and successful methods of instruction, Manter Hall is one of the oldest and best known unendowed schools in America. An exceptional curriculum prepares boys and girls for College Entrance.

Pre-induction courses planned and adapted to the needs of each student are emphasized today. The school enjoys a high reputation for overcoming successfully special difficulties.

Each instructor is a specialist and has an exhaustive knowledge of the special requirements for College Entrance in his subject. Of the sixteen thoroughly competent instructors, each of the following has taught in the School ten years or more: Courtney Bruerton, Ph.D.; John C. Hall, B.S.; Charles A. Hobbs, A.M.; Charles H. Mergendahl, Ed.M.; James A. Reeves, A.B.; Hollis Webster, A.M.; and J. Rowe Webster, A.B.

The building, designed for the unusual purposes of Manter Hall, offers dormitory accommodations. Classrooms and laboratories are small, well lighted and ventilated, intended for Manter Hall's small group teaching method.

Facilities for exercise comprise tennis, squash, swimming and rowing. Because of the School's exacting scholastic standards, no organized teams which require intensive application and exhausting practice are allowed to represent the School.

The fall term opens in September, 1943. Summer sessions are held during July and August, in Cambridge and in Wianno on Cape Cod. The School is, however, open throughout the year, and students may enter at any time for any period of time.

ST. GEORGE'S SCHOOL, Middletown, R. I.WILLET L. ECCLES, Ph.D , Head Master.

The procedures and policies of the School are based on the assumption that its main reason for existence is to produce a quality product. This is best done by careful attention to the individual, his character, aptitudes, interests and accomplishments. St. George's is small enough to study effectively the needs of each student. It is large enough to provide the competition in class work and in extra-curricular activities necessary for the development of self-confidence and maturity.

A primary objective is "to implant and strengthen in the boys' minds motives to right action which shall permanently control their lives." The boys' behavior outside of the classroom, therefore, is fully as important as success in their studies.

Classes are small; the ratio of teachers to boys is high. The faculty is experienced and among its members are men of outstanding reputation in their fields. Proficiency in the fundamentals of each subject is stressed. Boys are taught how to work in the supervised study hall. To the individual of high ability, accomplishment and maturity in any field, special opportunity is given whereby he is relieved of classroom work. No longer is the top-notch boy forced to do an average job. Instead he studies under the Preceptorial System which, although firmly established in collegiate education, is, for the first time, available in a secondary school of this type. Thus he pursues his major interest independently, thereby gaining advanced knowledge and familiarity with techniques he will use in college.

For those who wish to emphasize specialized training for the war effort, courses in aeronautics, navigation and meteorology as well as higher mathematics, physics, chemistry and mechanical drawing are available.

Frequent reports are sent to parents not only on each boy's academic accomplishment but also on his personal development.

The School is in the country but is close enough to Providence and Newport to enjoy the cultural advantages of these cities and, if necessary, to obtain the best medical advice. The health record has been exceptionally good. The life is simple and regular. Good health habits are taught and early bed hours are the rule. Everyone participates in the work-for-all program and the assigned chores must be well done.

Ample funds are provided for scholarship aid to those whose character, attainment and need warrant awards. For years the school has considered it a duty to assist members of the armed services to stabilize the education of their sons by making grants when necessity demanded. No distinction of any nature is made between scholarship and non-scholarship boys.

Emeritus.

FRANCIS I. BRADY, Ph.D., Assistant Head.

The Priory School, opened in September 1926, is attached to Portsmouth Priory, a daughter house of Fort Augustus Abbey in Scotland belonging to the English Benedictine Congregation.

The School trains Catholic boys thoroughly in their religion and provides a general education equal to that of the best non-Catholic schools. The courses lay the foundations of a genuinely liberal education. As a secondary and more concrete goal boys are prepared for college entrance

For the duration of the war, special attention is paid to requirements for those entering the various branches of the Service, and for those going to technical schools. Special emphasis is given to Mathematics and Chemistry.

Under the "House Plan", the Lower School (Forms I, II, and III), is in a House by itself; the Upper School has two Houses.

Boys take care of their own rooms, wait on table, and do work in buildings and on the grounds, and on the school farm which provides some of the provisions.

On the Island of Rhode Island, 22 miles south of Providence and 8 miles north of Newport, the school occupies 120 acres of beautiful country overlooking Narragansett Bay. There is every facility for Football, Soccer, Baseball, Basketball, Skating, Tennis, Sailing and Water Sports, Boxing, Track, and Cross Country Running, and for Golf in a nearby club.

The school conducts a Summer School and a Camp.

NELSON HUME, Ph.D., Head Master.

MOST REV. MAURICE F. McAULIFFE, D.D.,
Bishop of Hartford, Patron.

Canterbury School, founded in 1915, is a College Preparatory Boarding School for Catholic boys. It is conducted by a Corporation of prominent Catholic laymen: Henry O. Havemeyer, Terence F. Carmody, Nelson Hume, James Cox Brady, Jr., Hubert McDonnell, John S. Burke, and Carlton J. H. Hayes. It maintains the highest standards of discipline and scholarship, and gives a sound training in the doctrines and practices of the Catholic religion.

The Head Master and all the teachers are laymen. The chapel and religious services are under the direction of a diocesan priest appointed by the Bishop. The boys, from eleven to eighteen years old, represent the best type of American youth.

The school grounds, 135 acres at an elevation of 500 feet, are beautifully and healthfully situated, and provide space for Football, Baseball, Hockey, Track, Tennis, and Golf. There are three dormitories: North, built in 1928; Middle, completed in 1937; South, built in 1927. A Gothic Chapel was finished in 1928. The Gymnasium (1924) contains locker-rooms, basketball floor, squash courts, and a 75-foot swimming pool. A new Classroom and Laboratory building was completed in 1939.

Enrollment is limited to 100 boys. The School is remarkable for its excellent spirit of discipline and study, its pleasant and home-like atmosphere, its fine equipment, the character of its boys and masters, and its success in college entrance examinations.

ARTHUR MILLIKEN, B.A., Head Master.

Westminster is in its second half century of preparing boys for success in College and later life. The introduction of an optional Summer Semester provides acceleration of course for those who need it in order to complete their schooling prior to call for military service. The curriculum includes pre-induction training.

A small school for 130 boarding boys, Westminster offers a six-year college preparatory course. One master for every nine boys makes individual attention possible at all times, especially in the classroom where the ability of each boy to work and think for himself is of equal importance with the subject matter.

Boys are trained to find satisfaction in hard work and in a simple friendly, Christian way of life, and are given increasing responsibility and freedom as they show themselves ready for them. Good taste is stimulated in art and music, and boys are encouraged to develop their talents.

The well rounded plant includes separate dormitory buildings, chapel, gymnasium, swimming pool, squash courts. Important features are the quiet country location, easy access to Hartford, and every facility for outdoor sports.

THE CHOATE SCHOOL, Wallingford, Connecticut.

GEORGE C. ST. JOHN, Head Master.

The underlying purpose in the foundation of Choate was the desire to prove that the life of a family and the life of a school may be effectively combined; that a boy, while gaining the benefits that any good school must provide—efficient teaching, manly discipline, systematic exercise, and association with boys of purpose—need not lose the intimate, personal influence that should characterize his home. Each boy's course is planned for his own best individual development. All classes are small; there are special Honors sections for brilliant students, enabling them in some subjects to anticipate college work; there are laboratories for advanced work in Science; special training in Art and Music, Shop work and Forestry. To meet the present crisis, Choate is offering in addition to the regular curriculum, courses in meteorology, navigation, radio, mechanics, camouflage and aviation, including flying and ground school.

Above all the School's purpose is to instil habits of efficiency, hard work, self-discipline and a spirit of public service.

THE MERCERSBURG ACADEMY, Mercersburg, Pa. Founded 1836.

CHARLES S. TIPPETTS, Ph.D., Litt.D., Head Master.

Beautifully located in the historic Cumberland Valley, only seven miles from the Mason-Dixon Line, Mercersburg offers a boy an opportunity to prepare for college in a setting of great natural charm. The Academy buildings, located on high ground, face West toward the first range of the Alleghenies, 3 miles distant.

The Campus of nearly 300 acres is dominated by the Academy Chapel, designed by Ralph Adams Cram, and visible for miles around.

In its spire hang the great bells of Mercersburg, 43 in number, one of the famous carillons of America, nationally broadcast on Christmas.

Nearly 10,000 boys from every state in the country and from thirty foreign nations have studied here during the past fifty years. Twenty Olympic champions and many Rhodes' scholars are among its graduates. Its athletic teams are famous, but scholastic standards come first.

The atmosphere is democratic. Snobbishness is not tolerated. Regardless of family, wealth or influence, boys must stand on their own feet, judged by what they are and what they do.

Mercersburg exists for the boy. His interests come first. He should be happy but he must learn to work. This is not a school for boys who have been spoiled or indulged at home, or for boys who are disciplinary problems.

Classes are small. Close personal supervision of each boy's work is assured. Debating, public speaking, student publications, music and dramatics are the chief non-athletic activities. Every boy is required to take part in the athletic or physical training program.

Believing that, in time of war, a good foundation is particularly essential, Mercersburg will continue to emphasize fundamental subjects. A first summer session is offered in 1943.

The school is located mid-way between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, 85 miles from Baltimore and Washington, on through Greyhound bus routes. Special Penna. R.R. trains are run to and from Harrisburg on opening and closing of school.

Today the emphasis is upon objectives recommended by the War and Navy Departments for pre-induction training.

The individual is the all-important consideration. Each boy is carefully studied and his schedule adjusted to meet his individual requirements.

The Bordentown Plan, a scientific course in Study Technique, involving daily conference periods for instruction and guidance, really teaches a boy how to study. There is constant evaluation of progress and reports to parents are frequent.

The Lower School is separately organized to meet the academic, physical and military abilities and needs of the pre-adolescent boy.

The regular Summer Session permits reasonable acceleration.

Interesting features are the House System and Athletics for all.

STUYVESANT SCHOOL, Warrenton, Virginia.

EDWIN B. KING, M.A., Yale, Head Master.

An hour by automobile from Washington, Stuyvesant is on high ground in the beautiful Piedmont section of Virginia—healthful, accessible, a section renowned for its fox-hunting and other outdoor sports. These the boys of Stuyvesant enjoy.

The six year course of study as outlined by the Secondary Education Board prepares for college or service requirements. Each boy has his individual needs and abilities considered, and his course of study outlined accordingly.

A Lower School for boys from ten to twelve prepares not only for the Upper School at Stuyvesant, but also for the larger New England schools such as St. Paul's and St. Mark's.

New athletic fields, obstacle courses, and tennis courts give ample opportunity for, and skilled supervision and instruction insure proper body building to meet, the new demands of physical preparedness.

Riding, hiking and camping give added zest to outdoor life, and an indoor range makes rifle practice possible as a part of the program for older boys.

HEADQUARTERS IN GEORGIA

THE RIVERSIDE MILITARY ACADEMY,
Gainesville, Ga.—Hollywood-by-the-Sea, Fla.
GENERAL SANDY BEAVER, A.B., Pd.D., President.

One of the nation's largest and most distinguished military schools, Riverside is operating throughout the present emergency on a year-round basis at the Academy's permanent quarters in the Blue Ridge foothills. ("For the duration" Riverside's Winter Home at Hollywood-by-the-Sea, Florida, has been turned over to the U. S. Navy as a gunnery school.)

The curriculum prepares for all colleges, universities, technical schools, and government academies, or for business. The separate, efficient Junior School is for boys 10-14.

A Junior College department was added in 1941.

Program accelerated by 6-day a week operation so that three semesters are completed each calendar year. An optional feature offered in the interest of maximum service to the nation and to older boys—three semesters annually—opening fall, winter and summer.

An essentially military school, Riverside conducts an R.O.T.C. unit. Qualified graduates receive Army commissions.

Individual attention of faculty officers who live in same buildings and eat at same tables with cadets, helps develop well rounded boys in whom no one trait is stressed at the expense of others.

Efficient management makes it possible for the economical rate of $1094 to cover every necessary expense of the two-semester school year—uniforms, books, spending money, etc.

TODD SCHOOL FOR BOYS, Woodstock, Ill.

ROGER HILL, Head Master.

Todd is a school where each boy's education is the product of his own activities. It is a school in which each boy is made to feel, from the outset, that he is a useful part of the world.

Activity is the keynote, but fundamental subjects are not neglected, nor is college preparation considered secondary. Both are emphasized and the 60% of Todd graduates who enter large eastern institutions testify to the adequacy of the rich, progressive program, vitalized to the highest possible degree. Standardized achievement tests show Todd boys well above the average Illinois public school boy. Classes are from Grade I through high school.

Each boy works hard along some line of useful or artistic endeavor. A shop for textiles, for woodworking and model yacht building, studios for art, painting, camera club, the Farm with its kennel and actual experience in animal husbandry, the printing press on which the boys publish their own illustrated catalog,—all offer fields for colorful activity.

Five full scholarships for gifted boys were established in 1942 by Orson Welles, an alumnus. Nominated by public school principals throughout the country, they are to be chosen by the Head Master without regard to race, creed, or economic status.

The fifteen acre campus is just fifty miles from Chicago. Included in the unusual equipment are ten buildings, a 170-acre farm, separate hospital cottage, music building, glass covered swimming pool, theatre with modern stage equipment, toboggan slide, a stable for twelve horses, large athletic fields, gymnasium.

Founded ninety years ago as a home school, Todd is still that, providing a hundred boys with opportunity for joyous profitable living and development of native talents and interests.

CRANBROOK SCHOOL, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan.

RUDOLPH D. LINDQUIST, Ed.D., Head Master.

Cranbrook, a boarding and day school for boys founded and endowed by Mr. and Mrs. George G. Booth in 1926, offers college preparatory and general courses in grades 7 through 12. A postgraduate year is also given. Dr. Lindquist, Head Master since 1938, has developed exceptional opportunities in fine and industrial arts, music, and sciences. The faculty, averaging one teacher for every nine boys, has been selected because of personality, training, and ability to win the confidence and respect of boys of preparatory school age. An intelligent guidance program aids teachers in directing instruction and supervision toward the all around development of each boy.

Every student participates daily in the physical fitness program which is conducted by the teachers who work, play, and live with their students. Two gymnasiums, football, baseball, and soccer fields, tennis courts, hockey rinks, and natural facilities for canoeing, swimming, and winter sports encourage healthful year round physical activity. Student health is safeguarded by a resident physician assisted by a graduate nurse and a laboratory technician. A well-equipped infirmary is the center of the health program. Two college trained dietitians plan and supervise the preparation of wholesome meals. All students devote an hour and a half each week to work on the buildings, grounds, or in the commissary.

A Summer Session of eight weeks in 1943 enrolls boys of high school and junior high school age.

Cranbrook is affiliated with the Episcopal Church but does not emphasize sectarianism. The school is one of six cultural and educational institutions making up the Cranbrook community, all of which have won recognition for their high standards of achievement as well as for their architectural beauty.

SOUTHERN ARIZONA SCHOOL, Tucson, Arizona.

CAPTAIN RUSSELL B. FAIRGRIEVE, B.S., Head Master.

This modern Ranch School for boys 10-18 offers thorough College Preparation in the warm, dry climate of Southern Arizona, under conditions most helpful for physical, social and academic development. In the foothills of the Santa Catalinas, 12 miles from Tucson, adjacent to the Coronado National Forest, the attractive, steam heated, Hopi Indian Lodges provide living quarters with warmth, conveniences and comforts necessary for growing boys. Infirmary and nurse are provided.

The needs of each boy are studied, individual attention provided, and thorough preparation for college entrance given. Ten masters supervise the fifty boys drawn from all parts of the country. New students are selected by the Head Master who travels extensively in June and September. Special railroad cars, supervised by the School, bring students from New York in September and return them in May.

Each boy owns a horse. Polo, camp and pack trips, and other recreational activities with horses, Riflery under careful supervision, Tennis, Basketball and various contact sports are enjoyed. Fishing and exploration trips are taken to interesting Arizona points, as well as to Old Mexico. Boys with communicable diseases cannot be considered for enrollment.

ABBOT ACADEMY, Andover, Mass. 1829-1943.

MARGUERITE HEARSEY, Ph.D., Principal.

In a beautiful setting in historic Andover, Abbot, though well launched in its second century, is as young as its youngest student, for its traditions are reinterpreted into terms of contemporary life and are found to be invigorating and satisfying for the modern girl.

The School grounds of twenty-five acres include lawns, woods, playing fields, and a private pond. There are excellent facilities for Golf, Riding, and Skiing, as well as the usual sports.

Both the four and the five year course lead to college entrance, but the latter offers opportunity for emphasis on Art or Music, and provides a general cultural education for those not going to college, as well as opportunity to strengthen foundation work in college preparatory subjects. Students may enter at any year, though preference is given those enrolling for more than one year.

The Arts—Music, Art, Dramatics, and the great heritage of the humanist tradition—literature, modern and ancient history, science, are so presented as to prepare girls not only for college but for the specific demands of our contemporary democratic society so far as they can be foreseen.

The basic principle in the conduct of the School is the development, under the guidance of wise friendly teachers, of tolerance, imagination, clear thinking, and self reliance.

THE DANA HALL SCHOOLS, Wellesley, Mass.

MISS HELEN TEMPLE COOKE, Head.

TENACRE, the Junior School department of Dana Hall, is for young girls between five and fifteen years of age. The curriculum corresponds to that required in the elementary and grammar grades, and the first year of high school.

On the beautiful country estate, about ten minutes from Dana Hall, are several well equipped, modern homes providing accommodation for sixty pupils. The individual needs of the girls are carefully met. A Gymnasium, Outdoor Sports and Horseback Riding under trained teachers provide for physical welfare.

DANA HALL offers thorough preparation for all the leading Colleges for Women, and a broad General Course for those girls who do not wish to enter College. The School stands for thorough scholarship and general culture.

Located in a New England college town, fourteen miles from Boston, and possessing extensive grounds, Dana Hall affords to an unusual degree the advantages of both city and country life. Leading outdoor sports are offered including Tennis, Field Hockey, etc. The School stables provide fine horses for cross country riding, under an experienced master.

Under proper chaperonage pupils enjoy the rare opportunities Boston offers in Music and Art. (See also p. 902.)

Every successful school must offer pleasant surroundings, adequate facilities, capable instructors, thorough training, and a wide range of courses and extra-curricular opportunities.

This is true of Saint Margaret's. A visit to the School would convince one of its obvious physical qualities; records in most of the well known women's colleges show the emphasis on College Training and the thoroughness of the preparation.

Saint Margaret's offers more: Encouragement to each girl through the drama, the dance, writing, or some other field of activity to discover and develop within herself something worthy of expression. Hard work, clear thinking, reasonable living, wide interests, and sincerity of purpose are stressed.

LOW-HEYWOOD SCHOOL FOR GIRLS, Shippan Point, Stamford, Connecticut.

MISS MARJORIE L. TILLEY }
MRS. HENRY HEYWOOD FOX } Principals.

The Low-Heywood School, founded more than seventy-five years ago, is beautifully located three miles from Stamford on Long Island Sound. Mrs. Fox, one of the principals, is the sister of Mary Rogers Roper, Head Mistress for many years until her death in September 1939. She is also the niece of Edith Heywood and grand-niece of Louisa Low, the founders of the school.

Stamford is within an hour of New York, yet the spacious grounds and playing fields make it possible to stress hockey, tennis, basketball, lacrosse, badminton and riding.

The sciences are stressed and a course in Economic Geography is popular.

College Preparation is emphasized and a one year review offered high school graduates. Low-Heywood girls have made excellent records for themselves and for the school in the leading women's colleges of the East. There is also a General Course, and special departments of music, art, choral singing, dramatics.

The school accommodates fifty boarding pupils. This number provides competition in work, agreeable companionship in play, and enables the staff to know each girl as an individual, and to guide her in a friendly and personal way.

In the Main Building are the living rooms, dining room, bedrooms for the older girls, classrooms, study hall, laboratories, studio and gymnasium. A Junior Cottage houses the girls from ten to thirteen years. In 1929 Mary Rogers Roper built a beautiful Chapel in memory of her aunts, Louisa Low and Edith Heywood.

EMMA WILLARD SCHOOL, Troy, New York.

MISS ANNE WELLINGTON, A.B., Vassar, Head Mistress.

Thoroughly modern and completely in touch with the life of the times, Emma Willard School remains true to the ideals of scholarship and character training upon which it was founded a hundred and twenty-nine years ago. Today as always its essential appeal is to girls of serious educational purpose and high personal standards.

Candidates for entrance must present satisfactory school records and evidence of good character. Assignment to classes is made on the basis of previous records. A faculty of over forty permits instruction in small sections to which girls are assigned according to their aptitude.

The school prepares students for any College or University, and its certificate is accepted by all colleges admitting without examination. There is also a broad General Course, including such subjects as art, music, business, and home making.

Emma Willard aims to combine with scholastic efficiency, consideration of each girl's individual needs. Correction and direction of physical tendencies, formation of right habits of study, and the development of fine character are especially stressed. Extra-curricular activities—musical, art and dramatic clubs, and school publications—play an important part in the program for the development of the individual.

Physical training is required of all. The equipment, providing unusual opportunities for recreation and physical development, includes a modern gymnasium, swimming pool, two bowling alleys, nine tennis courts, four badminton courts, hockey fields, soccer fields, archery range, basketball courts, an indoor as well as an outdoor riding ring, and roller-skating hall.

If possible parents and prospective pupils should visit the school before making application.

THE HICKORY RIDGE SCHOOL, Putney, Vt.PHILIP B. CHASE, Executive Head.

Growing along with The Putney School has been an increasing group of younger children which has established the need for a separate school. For these younger boys and girls, grades one through seven, a farm of 450 acres has been purchased four miles away in a lovely village.

The Hickory Ridge School believes farm and family living important in building responsible, resourceful persons. It tries to make education socially effective through the following ways: rigorous academic study; use of the hand as well as the mind in work jobs and in a well-equipped shop; active participation in the arts with an orchestra, string group, dramatics, folk-dancing, etc.; recreation through camping, skiing, riding, swimming as well as games; emphasis on building self-control; a sense of community responsibility in identifying itself with the village in meaningful ways.

THE BEMENT SCHOOL, Deerfield, Massachusetts.Mrs. LEWIS D. BEMENT, A.B., Principal.

The all-day program of this Boarding and Day school offers, in the morning, individual instruction in Academic Work, and in the afternoon, Sports, Folk-and Social-Dancing, Music, Art, Dramatics, and Handcrafts. The teachers handle subjects rather than grades.

Each girl and boy receives individual attention and is encouraged to develop his personality through his own initiative, and at a rate according to his capacities.

Free from 'institutionalism' and with a wholesome simplicity of living, the atmosphere of the School, in this beautiful old New England village, is thoroughly conducive to the happiness and all around development of each Child.

The atmosphere of happiness and security makes Merricourt "just the place for children".

SUNSHINE ACRES, Mays Landing, New Jersey.

ILSLEY BOONE, Director.

Established after a year's survey of free schools in England, France and the U. S., this School of the New Education was opened in 1939. It is chiefly concerned with the building of character, self-confidence, resourcefulness and health. The normal processes and interests of natural growth are utilized as the foundation upon which the cultural and emotional life is fashioned.

Pupils are admitted from three to twelve years of age and are retained up through their eighteenth year. A balanced and unified curriculum allows a wide choice for the children to find their special bent, and freedom to develop it fully.

The rates are moderate and the "self help" plan provides opportunities for older pupils to earn a portion of the fee. Travel without extra cost is included.

On the banks of the Great Egg Harbor River near Mays Landing, there is every opportunity for a healthful outdoor life.

SPRINGDALE SCHOOL, Canton, North Carolina.
DR. THOMAS ALEXANDER, Director.

Boys and girls from 10 to 18 are prepared for college at this country home school in the Smoky Mountain region, twelve miles from Waynesville, North Carolina.

The program fits children to meet life's problems by having them participate in actual life situations, each according to his ability and stage of development. Effectiveness,—what a student is and can do, rather than what he knows,—is of primary importance at Springdale.

A month each year is devoted to travel, an important part of the curriculum. In 1940 one group travelled to New York City where they studied the artistic resources, museums, concerts, etc., and with an architect laid plans for a new house at the school. A second group went through the South and studied the social and economic problems of the region, emphasizing particularly the culture of New Orleans. The educational value of careful planning, the setting of definite objectives, the keeping of diaries, and making of substantial reports at the close of trips is stressed throughout.

HIGH VALLEY CAMP for boys and girls, also near Canton, is under the same direction.

BRADFORD JUNIOR COLLEGE, Bradford, Mass.DOROTHY M. BELL, A.B., A.M., President.

Bradford Junior College, founded in 1803 as Bradford Academy and located thirty-two miles from Boston, is the oldest institution in New England and next to the oldest in the United States for the higher education of women. It was the first junior college for women to be admitted to the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Incorporated from the beginning as a non-profit-making institution, Bradford has endowment and trust funds. It attracts students from all parts of the United States.

Not only is Bradford an accredited two-year college of liberal arts, but it also offers extensive instruction and opportunities in fine and applied arts, music, speech and dramatics, and home economics. The educational program differentiates work for students finishing at Bradford, for students transferring to other colleges, and for students transferring to specialized schools.

Five members of the highly trained and experienced faculty have the degree of Ph.D., and twelve are men. Courses and equipment are thoroughly modern. During 1939-1940 resources were greatly augmented by the completion of two new buildings, one housing classrooms and laboratories, the other a large auditorium, with pipe organ and fully equipped stage. Ample provision is made for all sports, including swimming, riding, and golf.

This fully accredited junior college offers to secondary school graduates an individualized educational experience, under especially favorable conditions of residence and opportunity, in preparation for thoughtful and constructive citizenship. The Academic Course is a well-rounded two-year unit, with a wide choice of electives, and is acceptable in transfer to major colleges and universities; the two-year Homemaking Course combines with a cultural background a modern approach to home economics and practical experience in home management; the Music Course, three years, specializes in vocal or instrumental music with allied academic subjects. The French Center and the Homemaking Practice Cottage present unusual opportunities. Eminent musicians and artists in many fields visit the college, and Boston, with its varied educational advantages, is only fifteen miles distant.

The college life emphasizes the maintenance of high academic and social standards and the development of individual responsibility. Small classes, an influential faculty, small house groups, and integrating social centers are significant features. Student organizations permit stimulating group activities. Excellent physical training opportunities include Riding.

FINCH JUNIOR COLLEGE,52 East 78th Street, New York City.*JESSICA G. COSGRAVE, A.B., LL.B., President.

This modern, fully accredited junior college enrolls graduates of secondary schools from all over the country who are interested in a two-year course combining academic college subjects with vocational training. Qualified students taking academic work may transfer to senior colleges.

In addition to the usual vocational and semi-professional courses Finch offers for the first time this year newly organized courses in Music, Medical Technology and Post-War Reconstruction, the last in collaboration with the Quaker Emergency Service and The Friends of Greece.

Special emphasis is placed on correlating with classroom and studio work the many valuable opportunities which New York offers in concerts, opera, the theatre, art museums and galleries, and as a laboratory for social and civic studies.

There is ample opportunity for Swimming (Junior League Pool), Riding (Riding and Polo Club for indoor, Central Park for outdoor riding), Skating, Tennis, Badminton, Body Mechanics.

BRIARCLIFF JUNIOR COLLEGE,Briarcliff Manor, New York.*MRS. ORDWAY TEAD, B.A., President.

Located in Westchester County thirty-five miles from New York City and three miles inland from the Hudson River, this chartered junior college offers to secondary school graduates liberal arts studies, college transfer and vocational courses. Geared to meet the necessities of the war emergency, Briarcliff is training girls to take their part in the increasingly important role which American women are assuming in war time. To the major courses in Secretarial and Medical Secretarial training, Home Economics, Child Development, Fine Arts, College Transfer, Interior Decoration, Costume Design and Merchandising have been added war-work courses in Mechanical Drawing and Drafting, Nutrition, Radio Communications, First Aid, Motor Mechanics, and Home Nursing.

Day and resident students enjoy the College's splendid facilities for many outdoor and indoor sports under expert direction. New York City, only an hour away by train or motor, provides a valuable laboratory for field work projects and research as well as endless cultural resources in music, drama and the arts.

HARCUM JUNIOR COLLEGE, Bryn Mawr, Pa.

EDITH HARCUM, President.

Beautifully situated in a college community of tradition and charm, Harcum offers to girls who are graduates of preparatory schools, two-year courses in liberal arts, fine and applied arts, and vocational training.

Each girl's course is specifically pointed toward usefulness in the present emergency.

Because of a well organized vocational guidance program, the professional quality of the work, the cultural advantages available in this locality, and the efficiency of the placement service, Harcum girls secure outstanding and interesting positions in business and professional fields.

The social and athletic life of the college is directed toward wholesome recreation, self-reliance and assurance.

The courses offered are Academic, Defense Courses with emphasis on Secretarial Science, Medical Secretarial Training and Nursery School Work, Music, Art, Costume Design, Merchandising, Dramatics and Home-Making.

An outstanding tradition at Harcum is the weekly gathering of faculty and students, held in the large studios, where work of every department is discussed and criticized from a professional standpoint. These informal occasions have the atmosphere of a salon and are broadly cultural and stimulating.

Opera, Concerts, Theatre, Art Exhibits, and balanced delightful weekends with cultural opportunities, social experiences and outdoor sports all make life at Harcum stimulating.

THE HOLTON-ARMS SCHOOL AND JUNIOR COLLEGE, 2125 S Street, Washington, D. C.

FREDERIKA HODDER, M.A., Principal.

Sixty-five resident girls at Holton-Arms are offered a well-rounded training for college and later life. Three courses are available: College Preparatory, a General Course in cultural subjects, and two years of Junior College. Each girl is given individual attention, and her program is adapted to her particular needs.

The Lower School accepts day girls from Kindergarten to High School.

OGONTZ JUNIOR COLLEGE, Ogontz School, Pa.

ABBY A. SUTHERLAND, Ph.D., Principal.

Standing for the best in traditional education and culture, Ogontz Junior College provides two year courses, preparatory to senior college or terminal. The life is colorful and vital.

In Home-Making, girls assume the entire care of a home,—food, furnishings, infant care, and dressmaking. Liberal Arts, Music, Art, Dramatics, and Secretarial Courses are offered.

Separately organized with their own faculty and equipment are the Preparatory School and Rydal School for Younger Girls.

MOUNT VERNON SEMINARY, Washington, D. C.

GEORGE W. LLOYD, A.M., Clark University, President.

OLWEN LLOYD, M.A., University of Cambridge, England, Head Mistress.

It is the conviction at Mount Vernon that among the girls who enjoy special educational advantages must be found the community leaders of the future. The program of this school is accordingly directed toward developing a consciousness of civic responsibility, a knowledge of the significant problems of this changing world, and a power to analyze such problems constructively.

The School offers three years of high school—General and College Preparatory,—and two years of Junior College. The curriculum provides a large number of electives to be chosen according to each girl's individual needs. The College bases its program of work and social activity upon these premises: That preparation for marriage should be more than a by-product of education; that girls should be equipped to exercise their political privileges intelligently; that self-discipline is an essential prerequisite of democratic leadership.

A new Residence Group of eight houses in the Spring Valley and a large Academic Building nearby were occupied in 1943 when the Navy took over the former plant.

MONTICELLO COLLEGE, Alton, Illinois.GEORGE IRWIN ROHRBOUGH, D.Ped., President.

Founded in 1835, Monticello Junior College will continue to stress a sound academic curriculum, adding only such courses as are directly contributory to the war effort.

Work in practical subjects like drafting, typing, and shorthand, as well as a stepped-up regime in physical fitness have been added to the basic offering this year.

Instruction in the creative arts will continue along with special emphasis on the Bible, Ethics, and Geography to bring to the students an awareness of the world about them, and an understanding of its problems.

Proximity to St. Louis, one hour by hourly interurban, makes possible a satisfactory social program.

FERRY HALL, Lake Forest, Illinois.*ELOISE R. TREMAIN, B.A., Bryn Mawr, M.A. (Hon.)

Ferry Hall, which celebrated its 70th anniversary October 1939, offers Junior College courses permitting girls to enter higher institutions as Juniors, and terminal programs. College preparatory work and general courses stressing secretarial studies, home economics, music, art, dramatics, are offered in the High School Department.

The five buildings, including two modern Georgian structures, are in a wooded, lakeside campus which affords facilities for outdoor sports. Riding is available at the Country Club nearby. The swimming pool is indoors.

LEICESTER JUNIOR COLLEGE,

Leicester, Massachusetts.

HENRY D. TIFFANY, JR., M.B.A., Director.

This school of business administration has adapted its course to meet war conditions. Many of the students are in the Navy and Marine Corps reserves. Both those in the reserves and those regularly enrolled as civilians may elect such courses as navigation, physics, and cartography.

Students who physically cannot qualify for the armed forces may take the business administration course with special emphasis on training for the branches of business and industry that will aid in the war effort.

NICHOLS JUNIOR COLLEGE,

Dudley, Massachusetts.

JAMES LAWSON CONRAD, B.B.A., President.

This degree granting Junior College of Business Administration and Executive Training was first in the East for Men and first of its type with full campus and dormitory equipment.

The college has provided courses in Military training.

Attractively situated in the Dudley Hills of Massachusetts, Nichols is readily accessible but apart from the distractions of the large cities. The spacious 75 acre Campus lends itself to participation in all phases of college life.

With a discriminating patronage and students from many states and foreign countries provincialism has been avoided.

Nichols has contributed substantially to educational progress in numerous ways. One of the most vital factors is the functioning of an Advisory Council of about forty outstanding business executives grouped in sections representing a complete cycle of business activity. These executives have analyzed the curricula and have prescribed the background courses necessary for an outlet insuring absolute soundness in preparation for specific fields.

THE KATHARINE GIBBS SCHOOL,
Boston, New York, and Providence.

GORDON GIBBS, President.

These well-known schools were established to train young women for representative secretarial positions in business, professional, and government offices. Courses are open to graduates of approved secondary schools. The One Year course centers in technical training, with supplemental business subjects. The Two-Year Course offers a balanced combination of selected college subjects and technical training.

Special courses are available to college women, training for executive secretarial practice, regularly attracting students from 150 to 175 colleges and universities. Openings at all three schools in September. Additional openings for technical courses in Boston and New York, February and July.

Delightful school residences are available the year round at the Boston and New York schools. Illustrated catalog and other descriptive literature on request.

THE HICKOX SECRETARIAL SCHOOL,
12 Huntington Avenue, Boston, Massachusetts.
MRS. EDINA CAMPBELL-DOVER, Principal.

Sixty years ago the Hickox School was founded on a principle unique in business education—close personal contact constantly maintained between instructor and student and the student's individual tendencies faithfully watched and guided. The essentials in secretarial training are retained—the non-essentials omitted. By this program the secretarial course at Hickox may be completed in from seven to ten months; while a sound working knowledge of two subjects—shorthand and typing—can be acquired in a much shorter time. The School has a limited enrollment and a placement record of practically 100%. Beginning or advanced students are accepted, if vacancies permit, on any Monday throughout the year.

AMERICAN ACADEMY OF DRAMATIC ARTS,
Carnegie Hall, 154 W. 57th St., New York City.

Founded in 1884 by Franklin H. Sargent.

This Academy is the first institution founded in this country for the purpose of giving a complete course in Dramatic Training. The School is chartered as a private corporation by the Regents of the State of New York. On the Board of Trustees are Owen Davis and Howard Lindsay; on the Faculty, instructors chosen for their special knowledge and skill in imparting it.

The Junior Course covers all essentials in technical training for stage, directing, and teaching. The Senior Course, organized as the Academy Stock Company, includes advanced study and supplies fundamental experience. Courses are given in Voice, Physical Training, Pantomime, Life Study, Vocal Expression, Dramatic Reading, Modern and Standard Drama, Dramatic Analysis, Radio Technique, Dancing, Fencing, Make-up, etc.

The work of the School is of special value also to those who are in professions, other than the Theatre, which require effective speech and action.

THE PRINCIPIA, St. Louis, Missouri.

FREDERIC E. MORGAN, Ed.M., President.

Four coeducational departments, all accredited, limited to the sons and daughters of Christian Scientists, are maintained.

THE SENIOR COLLEGE, Elsau, Illinois, offers a four-year course leading to an A.B. or B.S. degree.

THE JUNIOR COLLEGE: two years of accredited work.

THE UPPER SCHOOL offers four plans of study: College Preparatory, General, Commercial, Special, for students who wish to devote extra time to art or music.

THE LOWER SCHOOL: pre-kindergarten, kindergarten and 8 grades. Students in grades 6-8 accepted as boarders.

THE FROEBEL LEAGUE

112 East 71st Street, New York City.

ILSE FOREST, Ph.D., Director.

The Froebel League, which is incorporated under the University of the State of New York, conducts a professional school for the preparation of teachers for Nursery School, Kindergarten and Primary School. It attempts to develop teachers who will help children do better in all those wholesome activities in which they normally engage and thereby assist them to grow into their social and intellectual heritage.

Since New York State requires four years of professional preparation for those who would teach in the public schools of the state, The Froebel League through collaboration with New York University now offers, in addition to its own diploma program, a four-year curriculum leading to the degree of Bachelor of Science at New York University. This combination four-year curriculum has been approved by the Teacher Certification Division of the New York State Department of Education. A one-year course is offered for graduates of accredited colleges. A demonstration school and numerous day nurseries and elementary schools offer ample facilities for practice teaching.

SELECTED CAMPS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

The following camps for boys and girls have been selected as of the class that can successfully appeal to the private school clientele.

It has been difficult to get reports this year from the camps. Many that operated in 1942 will not open this summer. The difficulties for the most part are in supplying staff and councilors, and in some cases the government has taken over camp properties.

THE SUMMER CAMP GUIDE and A BRIEF SCHOOL GUIDE, separately published for years and last year combined in one, A GUIDE TO SCHOOLS, COLLEGES AND CAMPS, will not be published for the duration. A few copies of these Guides are still available.

The Handbook of SUMMER CAMPS, 12th edition, 1935, 734 pages, with maps and illustrations, published at $6.00, lists or describes 3500 private and organization camps. Now out of print.

Mail inquiries in regard to summer camps, clearly worded, will be answered, advice given and booklets furnished without charge.

A blank form on which to indicate exactly the kind of camp wanted will be sent on request.

For extended correspondence or investigation and for personal consultation a fee is charged those who are able to pay.

WHICH IS THE BEST CAMP

For Your Boy? For Your Girl?

Choosing a camp,—the selection of the twenty-four hour environment, of the personalities, that will surround a boy or girl all summer long,—is one of the most responsible functions parents are called on to perform.

In questions of law, in questions of health, in matters of architecture, one would not think of committing himself to a definite course without expert advice.

The outlook, the psychological attitude, the intellectual slant, the associations and the character of a son or daughter are of more importance than the plan of a house or a clause in a will.

It may have been the best camp for your neighbor's son, but your boy may be entirely different.

Perhaps it takes a different type of woman to handle your girl, to understand her and to succeed with her.

Write Mr. Sargent fully about your child's temperament, tastes and tendencies, and tell him what you want a camp to do. He can tell you where to find the right camp. State clearly the difficulty and the needs, the size of camp and region preferred and the expense limit.

LUTHER GULICK CAMPS, South Casco, Maine.

J. HALSEY GULICK, Director,
Proctor Academy, Andover, New Hampshire.

Founded in 1908 by the late Dr. and Mrs. Luther Halsey Gulick, the camps have continued to pioneer in the field of camp education. There are separate camps for older girls, younger girls, and, six miles distant, a group of young boys. The camps now have an alumni of some eighteen hundred boys and girls but the three separate camps have continued to remain small. Only fifty young girls are accepted and the older girls camp is divided into five groups of fifteen each. The boys camp is limited to forty.

Water Sports, Sailing, Riding, Crafts, Music, Camping Trips are stressed. Each camper is allowed much freedom in order that he or she may gain in independence and self reliance.

CAMP MARANACOOK, Readfield, Maine.

WILLIAM H. MORGAN, Director,
Readfield, Maine.

Maranacook, in its 35th season, is well organized and equipped. Junior, Intermediate, and Senior groups are entirely separate.

All campers are given a complete change and opportunity for mountain climbing at the auxiliary Camp in Weld.

The councilors, all educators, are experienced in boy leadership, which makes possible character building as well as educational advantages. Special arrangements can be made for a moderate amount of tutoring.

Cabins are permanent, fully screened and well ventilated.

Craft Shop, Boat Building, Horseback Riding, Sailing, as well as Ocean and Mountain Trips are featured.

Campers are under personal care of Mr. and Mrs. Cobb and their staff of teacher-councilors who have had training in camp and in school. Intimate study of each child emphasized. Usual Camp Sports plus Beach and Mountain Trips.

Pine Island Camp, Belgrade Lakes, Me. Est 1902.

Dr. Eugene L. Swan, 50 boys 5-16, $325.

Winter Address: 140 E. 46th Street, New York City. This progressive camp is on a beautifully wooded island. The flexible program includes all sports and numerous canoe trips. Dr. Swan has practised medicine for years and has had wide experience in the character training of boys. Weekly cruises along the Maine coast on the camp yacht "White Heather" as well as sailing in smaller boats on the Belgrade Lakes are extremely popular. The clientele is unusually carefully selected.

INDIAN ACRES for Boys FOREST ACRES for Girls Fryeburg, Maine.

DR. AND MRS. ABRAHAM KRASKER, Directors,
Rockwood Park School, Jamaica Plain, Massachusetts.

Indian Acres for Boys and Forest Acres for Girls, although under the same direction, are $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles apart. Each is supervised by a staff of able, mature and versatile personalities.

All sports are offered with riding available for all at no extra cost. Auxiliary camp affords real backwoods camping. Well planned canoe and mountain trips. Unusually fine rifle range. Military Science. Girls find opportunity for self expression in music, dancing, dramatics and crafts in the well equipped Craftshop and Theatre.

Modern buildings insure comfort and convenience.

LLOYD HARVEY HATCH, Lake Wassookeag, Dexter, Me.

Wassookeag was the first school-camp offering the scholastic facilities of an accredited summer session and the stimulus of outdoor activities developed on a summer campus. The experience of 17 consecutive summers points toward a nicely-balanced program, blending education and recreation, as essential to constructive use of the vacation months.

Health is the first standard. Sports for junior and senior groups—Aquatics, Tennis, Badminton, Basketball, Baseball.

The Wassookeag program was extended to a year-round educational system in 1928. By beginning at 13, 14, or 15 and by making the summer months a co-ordinated part of a year-round scholastic system, schoolboys complete the standard four-year course in three calendar years. Boys who must forego the usual college experience deserve a sound high-school course completed in time to get a head start on the government-sponsored college program.

WHICH IS THE BEST CAMP

For Your Boy? For Your Girl?

Choosing a camp,—the selection of the twenty-four hour environment, of the personalities, that will surround a boy or girl all summer long,—is one of the most responsible functions parents are called on to perform.

In questions of law, in questions of health, in matters of architecture, one would not think of committing himself to a definite course without expert advice.

The outlook, the psychological attitude, the intellectual slant, the associations and the character of a son or daughter are of more importance than the plan of a house or a clause in a will.

It may have been the best camp for your neighbor's son, but your boy may be entirely different.

Perhaps it takes a different type of woman to handle your girl, to understand her and to succeed with her.

Write Mr. Sargent fully about your child's temperament, tastes and tendencies, and tell him what you want a camp to do. He can tell you where to find the right camp. State clearly the difficulty and the needs, the size of camp and region preferred and the expense limit.

PO-NE-MAH, South Kent, Connecticut.

ELISABETH ALLEN WILLIAMS } Directors,
GILMAN WILLIAMS }

"Our House", Shirley Lane, White Plains, New York.

29th season. Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Allen in 1914 opened this camp for girls 6-18 and conducted it until 1933 when their daughter and her husband became Directors. Mrs. Williams, connected with Po-ne-mah for 29 years, is eminently fitted to carry on its high ideals. In the Litchfield Hills of Western Connecticut (1300 ft.), far enough away from all large cities to be entirely safe during the present world crisis yet near enough to be of easy access for parents, Po-ne-mah owns 700 acres and overlooks three lakes. Health is stressed and a wide variety of sports is offered. The Directors, teachers of music, feature Musical Appreciation.

Po-ne-mah combines many of the advantages of the large and the small camp. It offers the inspiration of numbers, a staff of the highest grade. Each individual girl's problems are made a matter of intelligent study.

The arrangement of the sleeping quarters is unique, all the girls sleeping in cabins, practically out of doors yet thoroughly sheltered.

The Craft Shop is fitted with looms, carpenters' benches and tables, together with other appliances for handiwork, such as weaving, basketry, stencilling, leather work, and carpentry. Here the girls may also do Red Cross work, if they so desire.

Riding horses and a riding ring, two clay tennis courts, one grass badminton court, a croquet green and an athletic field, all contribute to the enthusiasm and well being of campers loving these sports. In all of these, each camper receives training by expert Councillors and in all activities special care is given to guard against overstrain.

Po-ne-mah has a two-story rustic boathouse with docks and floats together with two sailboats, canoes, war canoe, rowboats, and play boats for the smallest children. All water sports are under the strictest supervision.

Dr. Allen, a physician of many years experience, is at Po-ne-mah during the entire summer and a nurse is always on duty.

A year-round producing ranch in secluded mountain valley five miles from southwest corner of Yellowstone Park. Affords an informal, natural, varied ranch experience for a small group. Horse and cowboy saddle for each boy. Range riding, haying, trout fishing, cattle driving, horse-back camping trip along trails of Targhee Forest and Yellowstone and Grand Teton Park country.

Big Bear Boys' Camp, Big Bear Lake, Calif. Est. 1922.

900 S. Los Robles Ave., Pasadena, Calif.

Ethel M. Johnson, Assoc. Dir.

Big Bear Boys' is a mountain camp on the shore of Big Bear Lake. All Land and Water Sports carefully taught and supervised. There is a trained adult counsellor for every six boys and a resident physician.

Peak and Pine, Idyllwild, Calif. Est. 1923.

Winter Address: 1116 Palm Terrace, Pasadena, Calif.

Located in the San Jacinto Mountains at an altitude of 5300 feet Peak and Pine offers girls a happy, restful summer. Riding, Swimming, Archery and Fencing, Pack Trip and Hiking and all activities interesting to girls are offered under expert instructors. The health program is under the supervision of a resident physician.

SUMMER CAMPS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Booklets on practically all Summer Camps are available in the offices of Porter Sargent for consultation, or for distribution to those who write explaining their needs.

Our staff has a wide acquaintance with Camps and Camp Directors extending back over a quarter of a century. Consequently we are in a position, if we know the boy or girl, to place him where his needs will be best met.

Recommendations of Camps can be made with confidence only if we are made acquainted with the boy or girl by letter, snapshot, and have some knowledge of his school, previous camps and social background.

PRIVATE SCHOOLS FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

Booklets or catalogs on Schools and Colleges are available for reference. They will be sent on request to parents and students who indicate their needs. Boys and girls in writing from schools in which they are enrolled should give their home addresses.

Mr. Sargent and his staff have a wide personal acquaintance with private school people, head masters and head mistresses. Their knowledge and understanding of boys and girls enable them to point out schools which, in opportunities, personnel and general attitude, are particularly appropriate to the individual.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Any parent, boy or girl desiring assistance in finding the school or camp best fitted to his needs will be sent a detailed printed questionnaire which calls for a clear statement of the case and enables us to offer effective help and advice.

No commission or fee is, or ever has been, accepted from any school or camp for enrollments made. The advice we give is unprejudiced, made without fear or favor. We judge schools and camps for what they can do to help the coming generation.

No charge is made for information. Where extended correspondence, investigation, or a personal consultation is necessary, a suitable professional fee may be charged the parent who is able to pay. But our concern is first to help the child, second the parent, third the school or camp.

DIRECTORIES

OF ASSOCIATIONS, ADVERTISING MEDIUMS, BUREAUS, AND FIRMS OF INTEREST TO PRIVATE SCHOOLS

The Directories that follow furnish an address list of great value to all who have to do with Private Schools or Colleges.

A file of Catalogs of Firms dealing in supplies and equipment for schools is maintained in this office. School Executives are invited to make use of these and our extensive files of information in regard to Firms which are in a position to serve them.

We will gladly answer inquiries in regard to where any particular service or equipment may be obtained.

"Where to Buy Supplies for Educational Institutions," a guide for educational buyers and "Where To Buy Everything for Summer Camps," have been discontinued for the duration. A few copies of these Guides are still available.

You, too, will be pleased—for our assortment is complete . . . and the cost per serving is so low as to give you a more generous profit.

Good food for pleased guests.

"The Magazine with a Vision"

The Progressive Teacher is now in its fiftieth year. It is strictly a teachers' magazine for all the grades and the rural schools. It is national in circulation and has a long list of authoritative contributors from all parts of the country. It brings you a veritable library of the best educational reading from experts in the field of education. It will keep you professionally and educationally informed.

The Progressive Teacher makes you think more of your profession. It gives you a greater conception of the school business. It gives you professional information. It adapts itself to your own school needs. It fights for your interests. It will help make you a leader in your community and increase your pay. You will find Progressive Teacher splendidly adapted to your own work, and we shall be delighted to have you on our mailing list.

THE BOOKLIST, long recognized as the librarian's standard guide in the selection of current books, is useful to anyone who uses care in choosing books and recommending them to students. Twice each month, the editors—with the aid of specialists in school and other fields—select and evaluate about 125 new books from the hundreds submitted by publishers for review.

Each issue contains brief descriptive and evaluating notes—and buying information—on new fiction, books in philosophy, economics, politics, government, education, commerce, the sciences, engineering, home economics, business, trades, fine arts, literature, history, biography. Children's books are included as well as selected books for young people. Frequent lists of free and inexpensive material and books on special timely subjects.
